HALBACH'S WHITE ROCKS

Have you succeeded in raising birds that you think will win at that early show? If not, we can supply you with cocks, cockerels, hens or pullets that will surely "turn the trick" for you as we reared more and better chicks this year than ever before. This is saying a whole lot, when you consider the QUALITY it takes to win at CHICAGO, where we won the CHAMPIONSHIP in Jan. 1907, Dec. 1908 and again in Dec. 1909. Get in line with the strain that produces a larger per cent of show birds than any other. Remember that in producing QUALITY we have not lost sight of the practical UTILITY points of this grand breed. We have a fine lot of utility cockerels at $4 each. These are well bred, big, husky fellows. If you want the best in either old or young stock, write "THE POULTRYMAN WHO TRIES TO PLEASE."

REGAL WHITE WYANDOTTE BOOK

I have just received from the printers another edition of my book on White Wyandottes. It contains 52 pages and is without doubt the most complete book that has ever been published dealing wholly with the White Wyandotte. It is full of illustrations from life and its pages deal with a variety of subjects including chapters on Origin, Description, Feeding, Care of Breeding Stock, Fertility, Color Characteristics, Washing and Fitting for Exhibition, Poultry Diseases, etc.

My object in issuing this book is to bring to the attention of every White Wyandotte breeder the Regal Strain, America's finest White Wyandottes. The magnificent winnings of this strain at the leading shows have never been equalled. New York State Fair 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910—26 blue ribbins out of a possible 30. Would you like such a record? Then breed the Regal Strain. 1500 Regal Cocks, Hens, Cockerels and Pullets for sale 1500. Send one dime for the REGAL WHITE WYANDOTTE BOOK. The information it contains will be worth dollars to you.

Ernest Kellerstrass Says

I Made $18,178.53 Net Profit In One Year Selling Chickens And Eggs

I took a flock of 1,638 chickens and made them net me a profit of $11.09 per bird in 12 months' time. My farm and books are open for inspection to any State Poultry Experimental Station. If your station doesn't find the above statements true, I'll donate $1,000 in cash to your institute.

My New Book Tells HOW I DID IT

In my new poultry book I tell how I made $3,600 in one season from 30 hens on a lot 24x40, by feeding the scraps from my table three times a day. I'll give you the names of those who paid me over $2,000 for the eggs alone from these fowls—you can refer to them.

I'll tell you how I make my chickens weigh 2½ pounds at 8 weeks of age.

I tell how I prepared my chickens for the show room, so that I won over 90 per cent of all the blue ribbons offered during 1907 and 1908. This has never been published before.

This book covers all branches—it tells everything necessary to success with poultry. It tells you what I have done—how I started.

I Tell You Everything That is Necessary to Success in the Poultry Business.

It also gives you my opinion and experience that I have had with advertising solicitors of poultry journals.

It also gives my opinion and experience that I have had with poultry judges in the show room, and why, in my opinion, the little fellow don't get what he thinks he ought to have in the show room. I tell it just as I have seen it and experienced it. There are several pages in this book taken from my records, and from my cash book and ledger. There are no secrets—I tell it all.

Try my way and you can raise them by the hundreds

HERE'S THE PLACE where two farmers' sons have built up a business of over $100,000 a year.

READERS OF Successful Poultry Journal

If you want to make money with poultry as the Curtiss brothers are making it, subscribe now for the Farm Journal, and get with it the new which tells how Roy Curtiss, a New York farmer's son, starting with a few neglected hens, has built up at the famous NIAGARA FARM the largest poultry plant in the world, with sales of over $100,000 a year.

Roy wanted to make some money. He saw that the hens on the place were almost entirely neglected, and he proposed that if his father (a grain merchant and farmer) would furnish the feed, he (Roy) would take all care of the flock, and supply eggs and chickens for the farm table, and all that were left over were to belong to him. His father agreed, and Roy went to work.

In two years he was using so much feed that his father had to cry quits, but the boy kept right on. He had grit and "go," just like your father's boys, and he was determined to succeed. He would start at two o'clock A. M. for Niagara Falls, thirteen miles away, with poultry and eggs to sell. His brother joined him in the business, and it grew and grew. They took the farm, and paid off the mortgage. They built and added to their plant, learning slowly how to avoid losses and make profits. Their tender spring chickens and delicious ducklings captured the best hotel trade of Niagara Falls, Buffalo, and the Adirondacks, and they began to see "big things" in the poultry business.

But they had no guidance. They had to devise their own methods, and learn by their own mistakes. If they had had such a guide as the CURTISS POULTRY BOOK, it would have saved them thousands of dollars and years of lost time.

This remarkable new book was written right at Niagara Farm, by the veteran poultryman, MICHAEL K. BOYER. Mr. Boyer had the Curtiss brothers right at his elbow, with their records and data. He says he never saw a general poultry plant so well managed at every point. No "putting on style," no fancy buildings, no ornament, but straight, solid business. Everything is planned for months ahead. Every day shipments go off, every day money comes in. You could hardly believe how little they lose. Their percentage of fertile eggs, of live, strong chickens hatched, of day-old chicks shipped without loss even to Kansas or Florida, is really wonderful.

This book describes fully their methods of managing incubators, handling eggs, feeding, killing, dressing, packing, and marketing. It gives all their formulas for mixing feed for chickens and ducks at different ages. These formulas have been gradually modified and improved, until now they bring the best results with such certainty that, if you couldn't get them, they would be almost priceless. All these methods have been tested by years of experience, resulting in what is believed to be THE MOST PROFITABLE GENERAL POULTRY PLANT IN THE WORLD. Whether you raise chickens, ducks, or eggs, whether you keep forty fowls or forty thousand, you will find here help that you can get in no other way.

Have you use for such a book? Then read the special offer below.

The FARM JOURNAL (thirty-four years old) has over 750,000 subscribers, MORE THAN ANY OTHER FARM PAPER. It is of great value to everybody, in town or country, who wants to make money by growing fruit, vegetables, poultry, eggs, milk, butter, as well as grain and stock. It is a great favorite with mothers, housekeepers, boys and girls, as well as the men. "Cream, not skim-milk," is its motto. It is clean, brief, bright, "boiled down," intensely practical. It tells in a few words, and just at the right time, what to do NOW, and the best way to do it. It is now running a very interesting series, "Back to the Soil," stories of city people who have gone to the country to make a home. If you care about outdoor life, or plants, or pets, or children, or anything that grows, then, no matter how many other papers you get, you and your family ought to have the Farm Journal.

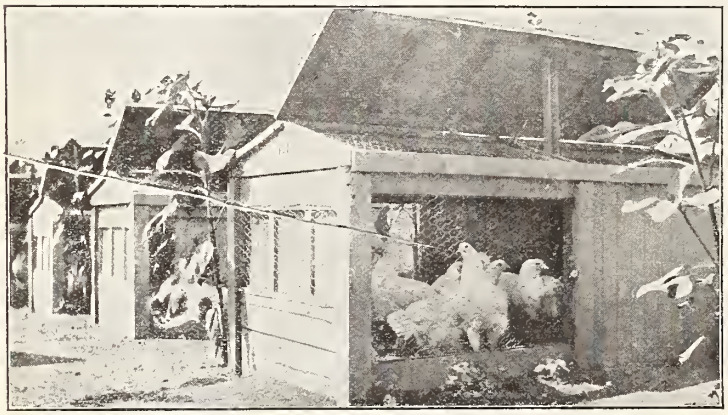
A GOOD LIVING

$1,500.00 from 60 Hens in Ten Months on a City Lot 40 Feet Square



Note the condition of the three months' old pullets at the School Farm. These pullets and their ancestors for seven generations have never been allowed to run outside the coops.

TO the average poultryman that would seem impossible and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden 40 feet wide by 40 feet long, we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practiced by the American people, still it can be accomplished by the

Philo System

The Philo System Is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry

and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success

from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks

are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler without any loss, and the broilers are of the very best quality, bringing here 3 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-Months-Old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each Per Month

in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using.

Our new book, THE PHILO SYSTEM OF POULTRY KEEPING, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell

One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel

Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves 2 Cents on Each Chicken

No lamp required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps, or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Testimonials

South Britain, Conn., April 19, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have followed your system as close as I could; the result is a complete success. If there can be any improvement on nature your brooder is it. The first experience I had with your System was last December. I hatched 17 chicks under two hens, put them as soon as hatched in one of your brooders out of doors and at the age of three months I sold them at 35c a pound. They then averaged 2½ pounds each, and the man I sold them to said they were the finest he ever saw, and he wants all I can spare this season. Yours truly,

A. E. NELSON.

Elmira, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—No doubt you will be interested to learn of our success in keeping poultry by the Philo System. Our first year's work is now nearly completed. It has given us an income of over $500.00 from six pedigree hens and one cockerel. Had we understood the work as well as we now do after a year's experience, we could have easily made $1,000.00 from the six hens. In addition to the profits from the sale of pedigree chicks, we have cleared over $960.00 running our hatchery plant, consisting of 56 Cycle hatchers. We are pleased with the results and expect to do better the coming year. With best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours, (MRS.) C. P. GOODRICH.

FROM POULTRY

The Poultry Review

A Monthly Magazine Devoted to Progressive Methods of Poultry Keeping

The Poultry Review is edited by E. W. Philo, author of the Philo System Book and founder of the Philo National Poultry Institute.

It is edited and printed on a practical poultry farm, where experiments are being conducted and reported in full in the Review. New discoveries and improvements are described and illustrated, and each issue contains a number of letters of experience and suggestion from followers of the Philo System.

Rev. W. W. Cox, our associate editor, is conducting a Philo System Plant, and his "Notes from a Six Hen Plant" in each issue have created considerable interest, and contain much valuable instruction. The first year's work on this plant netted over $500.

In addition to the best original articles it is possible to obtain, a review of the best articles from over a hundred publications is made—the "cream" of the poultry press arranged for the busy reader.

Photo taken from the roof of the Philo National Poultry Institute, showing a portion of the Poultry Plant where there are now over 5,000 pedigreed White Orpingtons on less than half an acre of land.

Another thing that is proving of great value to our subscribers is our Information Department. Our editors are always ready to help subscribers. When any difficult problem arises and you see no way of solving it, write us, and we will give you a prompt personal reply. It is quite probable that we have had a similar experience and can help you. Although no charge is made for this service, it is worth many times the subscription price.

For 1911 the Poultry Review guarantees the largest circulation of any paper of its kind—over 100,000 copies monthly, reaching the best class of poultrymen in every state and over thirty foreign countries.

TESTIMONIALS

E. R. Philo, Publisher Poultry Review, Elmira, N. Y. Box 214, Medicine Hat, Alta., Can., April 16, 1910.

Dear Sir:—Of all the poultry journals I take, I would fail in all rather than in the Review as I really like your paper the best of them all. Now I do not say this to curryfavor, nor for any other purpose, because I really like your paper for the pithy and sound articles. There is no dry reading in it as there is in other poultry journals, such as accounts of poultry shows that do not really concern any one but those who are written about. I do not think that any one in any part of the country cares who wins and who does not. It is all right in a local show, written and published by a local paper. Well, success and great success for the Review, and I hope to receive it regularly in the future.

Very sincerely yours,
R. G. Wetmore.

Dear Sir:—The Review came in its new dress today; quite an improvement in looks, and I am much pleased with it, as it tells you what you wish to know in a few words.

Yours for success,

Johnson Sold Over 75,000 "Old Trusty" Incubators

Here is a little story of a big success. I shipped 75,000 Old Trusty incubators last year—on 30, 60 and 90 days' trial. Not one came back. It's the old story of merit. It's proof of Old Trusty Quality.

Thousands of new beginners and old timers—farmers and poultry raisers everywhere—men, women and children—have had wonderful success with Old Trusty incubators.

Now the sun never sets on an Old Trusty. Wherever you go you will find them making big money for their owners. No other incubator ever made such a record. I don't believe another ever will. Because no other manufacturer can hit the combination of price and quality that makes the Old Trusty so popular.

In the first place I made Old Trusty incubators just as good as an incubator can be made. I secured only the best materials that money could buy. I had the right principle—proved up years ago. Then I figured on how many Old Trustys I would sell.

My sales were 52,000 the year before. I aimed for and figured on an output of 75,000 last year. I didn't ever consider the price while I planned.

One of the Big Trainloads Shipped to My St. Joseph, Mo., Branch —101 Carloads.

Shipped In Big Trainloads Like This—Last Year

My big volume of sales last year proved two things. It proved that Old Trusty incubators are the highest quality. That highest quality at a less-than-$10 price is the best combination ever struck in the incubator business.

My less-than-$10 price was a new one. Folks couldn't understand how I could do it. My competitors wondered. But I figured on the Law of Volume—big sales and a small profit on each.

Less Than $10 Now
Johnson Pays the Freight
(East of the Rockies)

I "lost" (?) about $500,000 last year because I could have sold Old Trusty incubators at $15 and $18. But Johnson is fair and square. I don't want to make a million dollars a year I'm satisfied with on each Old Trusty. This year I'm going to make and sell 100,000 Old Trustys, exactly the same model that made such a hit last season. I couldn't improve it if I got $40 for each. My price will be less than $10. My profit, less than 70 cents on each machine.

Last year I told my friends how I made my price possible. I explained that my overhead expense was the same, whether I made 5,000 incubators or 50,000 or even more. I told them that I saved on the cost of materials by buying the best of everything in trainload lots.

Then I showed them how confident I was of Old Trusty efficiency by allowing them or longer on any machine they bought from me. I agreed to pay the freight and refund their money if the Old Trusty didn't prove satisfactory. I backed that up with my 10-year guarantee. It was an offer they couldn't afford to overlook. Old Trusty is the only incubator good enough to back up a Free Trial and guarantee like mine. That's why I sold 75,000 last year. That's why I am going to sell 100,000 this year

Up to 90 Days' Trial

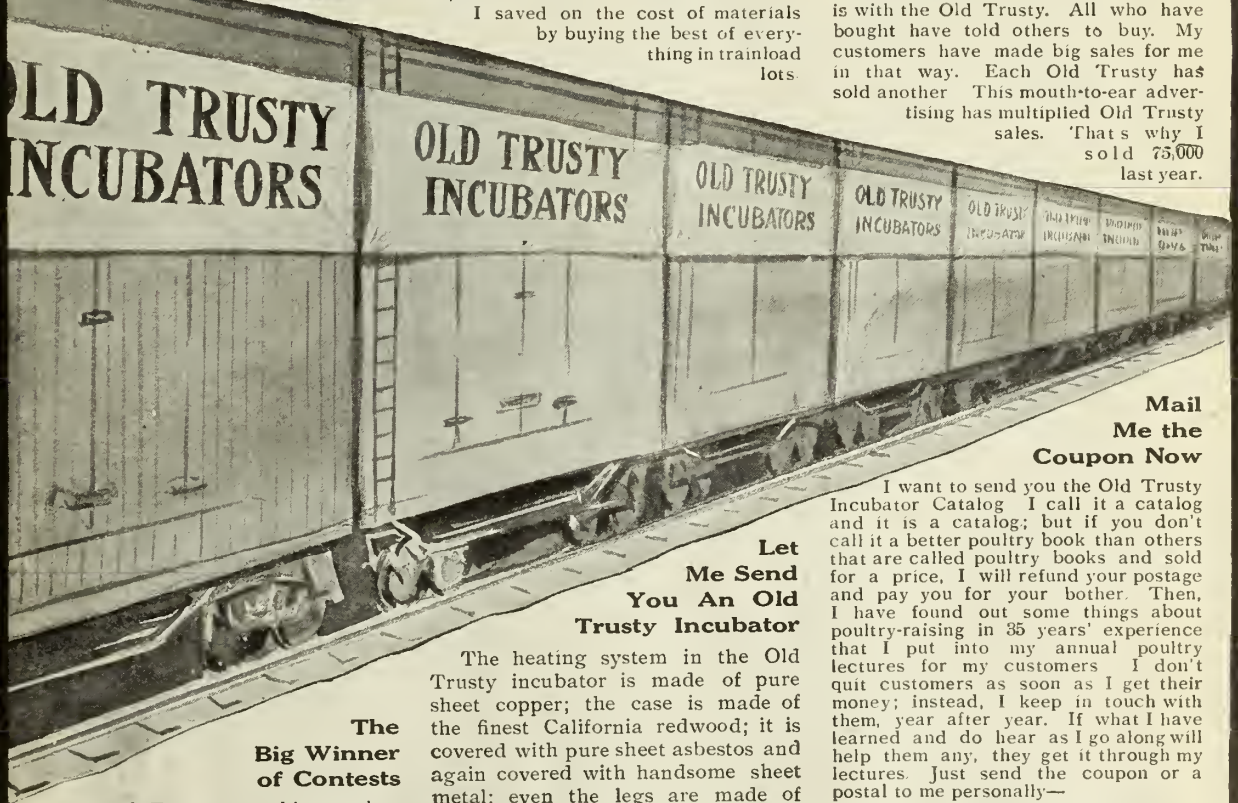
Now's the Time

You know how it is with things that you like. You tell your friends and neighbors about them. That's how it is with the Old Trusty. All who have bought have told others to buy. My customers have made big sales for me in that way. Each Old Trusty has sold another This mouth-to-ear advertising has multiplied Old Trusty sales. That's why I sold 75,000 last year.



The Big Winner of Contests

Old Trusty proved its worth at the biggest incubator contest ever held in America. Last year The Farmer's Mail and Breeze started this contest. Old Trusty Incubators won 1st, 2nd and 3rd prizes in a contest of 800.

But Old Trustys are making big money everywhere, in the hands of mere novices as well as with the most experienced poultry raisers. It will make big money for you. I proved it to the satisfaction of over 75,000 last year. I'm going to prove it to 100,000 this year.

Let Me Send You An Old Trusty Incubator

The heating system in the Old Trusty incubator is made of pure sheet copper; the case is made of the finest California redwood; it is covered with pure sheet asbestos and again covered with handsome sheet metal; even the legs are made of angle heavy metal; not a particle of wood exposed; absolutely safe under all conditions and circumstances. The direct-acting, automatic heat governor (regulator) on the Old Trusty is my own invention and my own patent. There are many imitations, but they are just imitators. I attach, connect and adjust the regulator and ship the incubator ready for business—each and every incubator tested before shipping.

I want to send you the Old Trusty Incubator Catalog I call it a catalog and it is a catalog; but if you don't call it a better poultry book than others that are called poultry books and sold for a price, I will refund your postage and pay you for your bother. Then, I have found out some things about poultry-raising in 35 years' experience that I put into my annual poultry lectures for my customers I don't quit customers as soon as I get their money; instead, I keep in touch with them, year after year. If what I have learned and do hear as I go along will help them any, they get it through my lectures. Just send the coupon or a postal to me personally—

THE BOOK THAT EVERYBODY IS BUYING—

Secrets of Expert Exhibitors

And Easy Lessons in Judging—By Frank Heck

A book that is new in character and the most valuable and interesting production ever published for breeders of exhibition fowls. No other book or similar publication comes within gunshot of it. It is in a class by itself.

The time has gone by when a breeder can pick up birds right out of the yards and win with them without special preparation. This is true even in the smaller shows. There are always at least a few hustling, enterprising breeders in nearly every locality who are keenly alive to the financial profit and the honors accruing from winning over all competitors. These breeders use all legitimate methods for putting their birds in show condition.

FAKING AND LEGITIMATE PREPARATION—BOTH LAID BARE.

Faking is certainly wrong and it should not be practiced, but even in legitimate show preparation what chance have you to win over one or more honest competitors who may have a copy of this book and thereby possess the knowledge which enables them to fix up their birds in scores of ways that are not known to you. Consider also the immense advantage you would have in being able to detect such forms of faking as can be discovered in cases where there may possibly be a dishonest exhibitor in the class.

How to Prevent Color Cuts on Plumage by Stopping the Flow of Blood from Comb, Wattles, etc., when Injured in the Show Room.
Complete Detailed Instruction for Washing and Chemically Bleaching White Birds.
How Black or Gray Specks in White Plumage are Hidden.

THE ABOVE SUBJECTS ARE ONLY A PORTION OF THE CONTENTS. There are many other equally interesting, important and valuable secrets, many of them being alone worth the price of the book. There are many seemingly "little" things that are of great importance and that you would never think of. THE EASY LESSONS IN JUDGING ARE ALSO A FEATURE OF THE BOOK AND WILL TEACH YOU THE PRINCIPLES OF SCORING FOWLS.

ALL THE METHODS, DRUGS, CHEMICALS AND VARIOUS MODES OF PREPARING BIRDS FOR THE SHOW ROOM ARE FULLY EXPLAINED.

You need the book to protect yourself against the dishonest fakir and you need it to put yourself on an equal footing with your honest competitors. It will save you dollars in useless entry fees, and it will show you how to win the coveted prizes and honors which your rivals would otherwise receive.

Have you ever bought a poultry book on general topics or disclosing some system or so-called secrets, and upon receipt of it had your expectations drop with a dull thud of disappointment? Well! this isn't that kind of a book.

THE PRICE OF THE BOOK IS $2 AND IT IS WORTH THE PRICE.

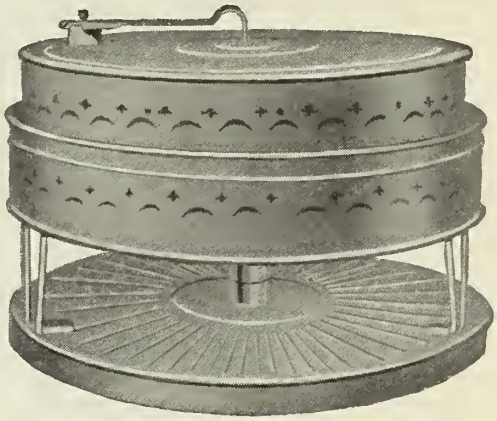
A Little Poultry and a Living

Is the title of a booklet we will mail free. It was written by the author of the Philo System book, who makes everyone of his hens pay him a proft of $50 to $100 each

Cycle Brooder Hatcher, a complete all metal, fire-proof hatching and brooding plant for only $8.00.



The All-Metal, 50-egg Cycle Hatcher only $6.00, complete.

Our New Discoveries Make Poultry Keeping Easy and Profits Sure

Our machines were used exclusively in the original Philo System plant, where over $1,500 FROM 60 HENS IN TEN MONTHS has been cleared from the sale of eggs, baby chicks and fowls, raised on a city lot 40 feet square. One of the largest hatching plants in America saved over $700 this year by using our system of brooding. We sell the best brooder ever made for only $2.50.

One party hatched and raised $500 worth of poultry last year with four metal mothers, and hundreds of others are delighted with our machines and our new way of raising poultry. Our combined machine hatches and broods perfectly at the same time, with only one lamp and one-fifth the oil used in other machines. Once filling the lamp completes the hatch. It runs as steadily as a clock in any room from cellar to garret, and our Long Burning Safety Lamp runs on for weeks without attention. It is the only machine that airs the eggs in the natural way and applies the heat to the chicken like the mother hen.

TESTIMONIALS

The Cycle Hatcher Co.,
Elmira, N. Y.

Sirs: I have used your incubators, both the Cycle Hatcher and the Brooder Hatcher, during two seasons, and found them very satisfactory, as they were easily managed and gave excellent results every time. The Brooder Hatcher makes a convenient place for brooding the little chicks when first hatched, before putting them into the fireless brooders.

A Railroad with Character

GEO. J. CHARLTON, Passenger Traffic Manager — R. J. McKAY, General Passenger Agent

GEO. W. MITCHELL, Connecticut.—"During New York Show we sold two pens each for $250, additional to other fine sales, all hatched in Cyphers Incubators."

WM. McNEIL, Canada.—"I showed 28 birds at Boston last winter, all hatched in your machines. Won 28 1st prizes and all specials offered."

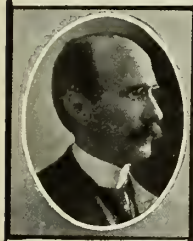
U. R. FISHEL, Indiana.—"Reared this year over 3,000 White Rocks; every one hatched in Cyphers machines. Never had as large, vigorous birds."

ERNEST KELLERSTRASS, Missouri.—"I use nothing but Cyphers Incubators for hatching Crystal White Orpingtons, and my finest birds are hatched in them."

D. W. YOUNG New York.—"The good work of your Incubators contributed largely to my winnings at New York and Boston. Used five machines."

A. G. DUSTON, Massachusetts.—"If you want large, healthy chicks use Cyphers Incubators. Been user since 1898. Every year sold hundreds of winners."

W. S. RUSSELL, Iowa.—"Used Standard Cyphers Incubators the past six years. Recommend it to anyone, expert or novice; first-class incubator."



E. B. THOMPSON, New York.—"During 30 years' experience have never seen equal of Cyphers Incubators. I feel safe in putting my best 'Ringlet' eggs in the Cyphers."

CHAS. V. KEELER, Indiana.—"Used your Incubators last dozen years, hatching the hundreds of prize-winners I have exhibited and furnished customers in America, England, New Zealand, etc."

VICTOR BRADLEY (Bradley Bros.), Massachusetts.—"Your machines seem to be a necessity to us, honestly believing them the best made, and some of our best birds have been hatched by their use."

Poultry Is a Billion Dollar Industry

These Men Have Helped Make It So

THEY tell you how Cyphers Incubators and Brooders have helped them. Send today for our big, handsome 212-page Cyphers Complete Catalog and Annual Poultryman's Guide. It is a gold mine of valuable, inspiring information for every earnest man and woman who is interested in any branch of poultry raising, and who wishes to get out of the business all the profit and all the pleasure there is in it.

This New Year Book For 1911

tells about America's Billion Dollar Industry; about Cyphers Incubators and Brooders, and more than 100 other standard poultry supplies.

Just glance at the type of men whose half-tone portraits are printed on this page. These are recent portraits, representative of America's foremost successful poultry breeders—the "winners of the blue" in all parts of the country at the largest annual exhibitions. They are Cyphers owners! The Cyphers Company catalog for 1911 contains the portraits of scores of other leaders in the profession of poultry husbandry.

The Severest Test of an Incubator

—and proof of the Cyphers leadership, and its wonderful dependable qualities—is the success had with it by these poultry breeders whose business it is to produce standard fowls of the highest exhibition quality. These men would not use—they could not afford to use an inferior incubator.

Cyphers Incubators are the world's greatest continuous hatchers. Here's strong proof:

Mrs. C. A. Peabody, Reedsburg, Wis., wrote us Sept. 5, 1910: "I took 400 eggs in my No. 3 Cyphers Incubator to the Reedsburg Fair. I live six miles from town; I took the machine on a lumber wagon the first day of the Fair, Aug. 9. Out of the 400 eggs I got 393 chicks, all very smart—there is not a cripple in the lot."

Walter Gerald, Unity, Maine, wrote us Aug. 4, 1910: "Have hatched as high as 140 chicks from 144 fertile eggs in the No. 1 Cyphers. I trusted eggs in it that cost me $2.00 each."

Own a Cyphers First—Instead Of Last

If you are going to use an incubator buy a good one—the best is not too good for you! You will want to own a Cyphers if you really mean business, and the time to buy it is first—not after you have "tried" some cheap machine and met with discouraging losses.

Women Make Big Money

They find poultry-raising simple, easy, profitable work—with a Cyphers. Note these reports:

Mrs. Decatur O'Brian, Liberty, Texas, wrote us July 23, 1910: "I have kept the two Cyphers Incubators running constantly the past season and have hatched about 3,600 Barred Rock chicks. I supply day-old chicks and find this machine satisfactory for the purpose—simple, safe and sure."

Mrs. H. E. Heck, Nichols, N. Y., May 10, 1910, writes us: "I got my Cyphers Incubator second hand seven years ago; have had grand success every year and hatched hundreds of chicks for other people. Now I have more orders than I can fill." We have hundreds of similar letters.

But Get Our Big Free Book!

We'll send it to you, postage paid. Contains hundreds of interesting facts, practical hints and money making suggestions; tells all about Cyphers Incubators and Brooders and more than one hundred standard poultry specialties. Address home office or branch store nearest you. A postal will do. Mail it now.

A. C. HAWKINS, Massachusetts.—"Used your Incubators and Brooders with good success. Chicks from my best matings have been hatched in Cyphers Incubators, winning prizes for me and my customers."

J. C. FISHEL, Indiana.—"We would not think of using any other incubator than the genuine Standard Cyphers—the best. The past season we averaged 90½ percent. of the fertile eggs set."

GEO. H. RUDY, Illinois.—"All my finest birds have been hatched in your Incubators and raised in your Brooders. Used your Incubators, Brooders and Supplies exclusively six years."

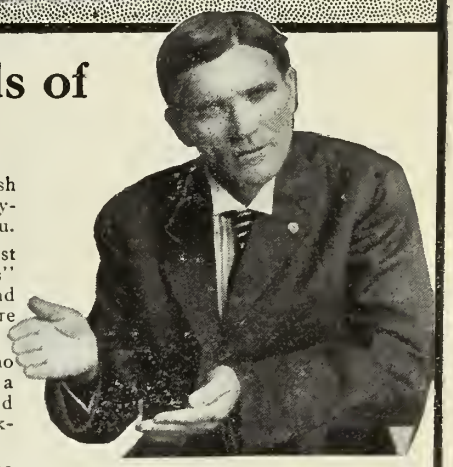
Make the Poultry Business A Real Business

Queen

Join the Ranks of My Thousands of Money Making Friends



KIND reader, let us be frank with each other.

We are interested in the same business. We can afford to talk plain.

Are you making the success of poultry you expected?

You deserve success, but are you making the money you are entitled to?

Poultry Business a Real Business

Are you giving your poultry the care and attention that you would have to give any other paying business?

Have you read up and posted yourself on the true way of conducting a modern, money-making poultry yard?

And have you provided yourself with the right equipment in the way of incubators and brooders, so that you may be able to get the very best results in hatching and raising chicks?

If you are one of the many haphazard poultrymen who think the poultry business may be allowed to run itself, let me advise you to change your way of doing as soon as possible.

The Queen Incubator Way

I am the originator of the Queen Incubator way of making poultry pay. I wish I could make you realize, my poultry-loving friend, what this means to you.

Poultry can be made to pay most astonishing profits. There are no "ifs" nor "ands" about it. Many thousand people have demonstrated it, and are demonstrating it every day.

Dollar for dollar invested, there is no other legitimate business on a farm or a city or town lot or small piece of ground that can compare with poultry in making money.

Still, poultry is not a business to be neglected or conducted in a haphazard or slipshod way.

The Systematic Way

The Queen Incubator way is a systematic way. It means the doing of the right thing in the right way at the right time. It means the use of hatching and brooding appliances that cannot go wrong, and that will keep you from going wrong. It is the most pleasing thing in my life that I have been able to start so many people in the true way of making poultry pay.

At the beginning of last October my books showed over 61,000 people who had adopted the Queen Incubator way.

61,000 Money Makers

These 61,000 people are money makers. Not just fanciers, or people who want to amuse themselves with a few fine fowls, but men and women —who are in poultry for a living;

—who give it their time, attention and best efforts;
—who follow it as a regular business to make money out of.

It is a great army of successful poultry raisers. I am convinced that there is no other such an army of active, earnest men and women engaged in poultry raising as a real, money making business in this country.

And the army is growing. Many thousands have joined it already this season.

A Profit Pointer

My friend, would it not be worth while for you at least to investigate this Queen Incubator way of making the poultry business a real business? Poultry may be new to you. If so, it is all important that you start right.

Or you may not have been as successful as you expected. That means there is something wrong. It is not the fault of the business—the fault is somewhere else. The Queen Incubator way will set you right.

My Offer to You

I want to make you the same offer I have made to so many thousand other people, which has been so helpful to them.

First, I want to send you, free, postpaid, my fine Poultry Guide and Catalog with my plan of making poultry pay—of making the business a real business.

Then I want you to know my plan of starting people up in poultry in the Queen Incubator way.

Queen Incubators Sent Out on the Make Good Plan

You must know how I put Queen Incubators out in the hands of struggling beginners and other earnest poultry raisers on the make good plan, giving them a long time free trial, and an opportunity to show how prosperous they can become with Queens.

My friends, I want you to take this offer as personal to you. Act on it now. Asking for my Book, Plan and Offer does not obligate you in any way. It is my way of showing you how I make good. I take all the chances, you take none.

I put the coupon below to make the way easy for you. Fill in your name and address, tear out and send to me, or write a postal or letter.

Let Me Save You 50% Of Your Incubator Expense

YOU know Chas. A. Cyphers—you have heard of the Standard Buffalo Incubator famous the world over as a wonderful achievement.

The New Buffalo Equipment

combines low cost with quality. I have found a way to make as good a machine as has always been associated with my name and sell it at a low price. New materials, new methods of manufacture, and a big cut in selling cost have made the new low cost Buffalo a possibility.

I have cut out the expensive catalog, follow-up, printing, postage, branch houses and managers. I have not saved on the cost of manufacture, but on the selling cost I have cut to the quick.

I give you a chance to save the one-half that I save; I give you a standard high percentage hatcher made of the best material and workmanship at the lowest possible price.

The New Buffalo Incubator is constructed with casing of open hearth, galvanized iron. It is lined with fibre board, which eliminates any loss of heat by radiation. The walls are double; spaces between being well packed. In addition to a glass door, it has an outer hardwood paneled door to darken the hatching chamber and to preserve the heat.

No Change In Principle

In the New Buffalo the pure air is heated in a three compartment heater, a system which combines Perfect Ventilation with Perfect Heating. In its many years of use, owing to the more successful results obtained, it has almost supplanted the hot water system with its cheap and leaking radiator and limited ventilation.

Accurate Heat Regulation has been a strong feature of my hatchers, and the new regulator is more perfect than any of the others.

The Egg Trays are strongly made; are now covered with Galvanized Wire Cloth, and will last for all time.

The Legs on the Incubator are made out of heavy metal; are strong and nicely shaped. (See illustration).

Double Door and Nursery.—My experiments have proven that the chicks should be left on the tray until the hatch is over. The Double Door makes a dark hatching chamber, in which the chicks do not pile up. It also makes a warmer front. All these perfect features are found only in the New Buffalo.

I am offering all these new improvements in the Standard Buffalo Incubator at half-price —a saving of 50% to you. Why should you pay twice my price for an incubator not up to the New Buffalo Standard?

You Get These Low Prices:

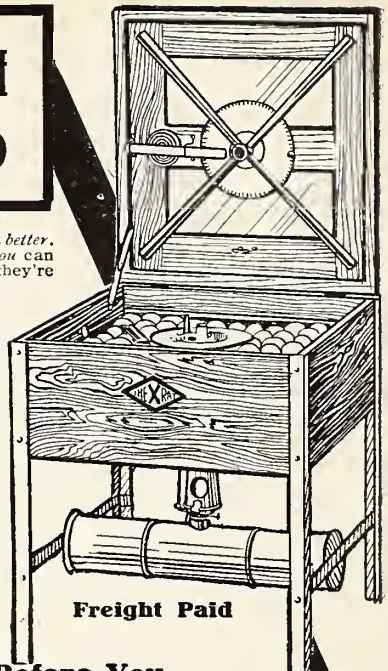
A Better Hatch, With One Gallon of Oil—and One Filling of the Lamp



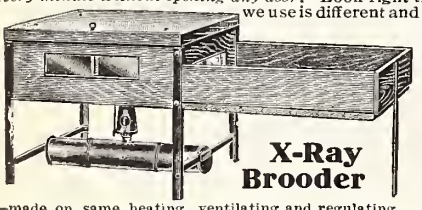
Freight Paid

Here is the incubator that is made on the only correct principle. It's as different from others as it is better. We have proved it to the satisfaction of thousands—and they have profited. Let us prove it to you so you can profit. We'll show you why every other incubator is wrong—wrong in principle—so no matter how well they're made they can't work as well as this X-Ray Incubator. Note these reasons.

First—the X-Ray Incubator lamp is right square in the center, where it should be—not on the side. Thus there is no cold side. Thousands of thermometer tests show that the temperature is exactly the same all through the egg-chamber always. By placing the lamp underneath we can equip the X-Ray with a big oil tank—holds 4 to 8 quarts of oil—but only 4 quarts are needed to a hatch—we guarantee it. Here's why. Our automatic trip cuts down the flame when necessary—others burn high all the time and let excess heat escape. You never touch the regulator on the X-Ray. It's automatic—the most perfect regulating device ever invented. But that isn't all. Not alone do we save you two-thirds of the oil—and do away with filling the lamp every day.

THE X RAY INCUBATOR

has its door at the top—with two double-glass panels. Simply raise the lid to ventilate or to turn eggs. Eggs are never taken out of incubator. And you can see the thermometer every minute without opening any door. Look right through the glass at the top. Even the thermometer we use is different and better than any other. You should know all the facts about this wonderful X-Ray Incubator and X-Ray Brooder. So many advantages over all others that they're worth knowing about. You'll agree with us after you know what X-Rays have done.



X-Ray Brooder

—made on same heating, ventilating and regulating plan as X-Ray Incubators. Just as superior as brooder. The easiest brooder to clean and to keep clean. It raises the chicks—doesn't kill them. Be careful when you buy a brooder. It's even more important than an incubator. Get our book at once and read the facts. They'll interest you vitally.

Get Our Free Book Before You Buy Any Incubator or Brooder

Read all the facts. See beautiful color-illustration of X-Ray Incubator. Read how well it's made. Best of materials—genuine California Redwood, all enameled—steel covered, beautiful Rosewood finish, bottom and all. Legs galvanized steel, thoroughly braced and guaranteed to stand five times the weight ever necessary. We'll send you our low price for this incubator—the only one that's right. We'll let you prove it yourself by giving you time to try it for three hatches. You will find it just as we say. You'll never give it up after you know what it does. Send us your name and address on a postal right now. Ask for interesting book No. 17. Address now—

REYNOLDS

S. C. WHITE LEGHORNS

(The kind that lay eggs.) "Some folk say there is money in hens." "Some folk say there isn't"---depends on the kind. Did you ever hear of a person losing money on chickens when they followed the egg end of the business?

The advantages of the Leghorn as a money-maker are: They eat less---by one third; they require less room by one third, you can keep more in the same space. They are always busy and don't get too fat. That makes it possible to confine them and still get eggs. They never set (time saved.) Why bother with setters? They come to broiler size 7 days sooner than others.

25 show cockerels $15.00 to $50.00 each; 50 show pullets $10.00 to $25.00 each; 50 cockerels, good fancy breeders or show birds, white and will score well---$5.00 to $10.00. 50 pullets at $3.00 to $5.00. 300 general utility pullets and cockerels---$2.00 each. 50 breeding hens left---price $2.00 and $3.00. 5 cock birds from my breeding pens $5.00 and $10.00 each.

Will exchange Leghorns for choice Pigs, Duroc Reds. If you expect to make money, my long back, White Leghorns will do the business.

S. and Canada, and the past year I sold prominent winners, many of them 1st and special prize winners for best in shape and color at Alaska-Youkon Exposition at Seattle, also Chicago, Indianapolis, Madison Square, N. Y., Boston, Pittsburg, Pa., Louisville, Ky., Montreal aod Ottawa, Ont., and other shows many of them in the strongest competition with birdsbought from every noted breeder in America.

I sell all my stock on approval. That is, if not satisfactory can be returned at my expense and I will freely return your money in full. That alone should prove what I claim and my type was considered best at New York shows a year ago above all other breeders; that is, the low blockey type and stay white birds. In fact, have bred out the brass years ago. I have also bred for vigor and great laying and I have the farm for it. I keep my fowls in open front coops and chicks have free farm range. If you want some high class breeders or show birds write me.

My egg trade has been one of my best ads. I have for many years gained many of my best patrons with my egg trade. I sell eggs from only the best matings, same as I hatch from and from only carefully selected matings. At $5.00 per sit, or 3 sittings for $12.00, will be limited and only the early ones will be sure of eggs on time so if you place order now, with amount, you can have them when wanted, for I book only limited number for any one time. Satisfied customers have been my best ad. Your success is my success. J. H. JACKSON, HUDSON, MASS. Lock Box 89.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL
FOR STANDARD BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO RAISE IT

Vol. XVII CHICAGO, ILL., JANUARY, 1911 No. 1

Make Your Matings Successful Ones.

How to Secure Fertile Eggs. Age of Breeding Birds. Number of Birds and the Rules that Govern. Cause of Infertile Eggs and Weak Chicks. Many Other Vital Factors.

By Rev. C. E. Peterson.

JANUARY is the month in which most of the breeders for the season's work are selected and mated.

In fact the selection has gone on for some time, as every breeder who knows which is which and has an eye for the promising young birds, will by this time know pretty near what he intends to do.

The fertility of the eggs from each pen mated is, of course, of great moment, and therefore we will give this matter our first consideration, for however good the birds may be in feather they cannot reproduce themselves except the eggs are full of vitality, for the vitality in the germ is the foundation strength of the growing stock, and the beginning of all successful life both in man and animal.

Now the fertility of eggs depends chiefly on two conditions being observed and neither one can be disregarded: the stock birds must be in good health and the number of females allowed to each male not more than he can manage and keep himself in sexual vigor.

The number of hens that any cock-bird may be allowed naturally depends upon the age and vigorous propensities of the bird, and whether he is on free range or in confinement, whether he is of an active or sluggish dispositioned breed and the time of the year in which he is mated to his companion.

For instance, a Leghorn male will very frequently give proper attention to fifteen females in a fair-sized pen, where a Cochin would often times produce a number of infertile eggs mated to half of that number, and if the Leghorn was on free range when spring opens up he would manage from twenty to thirty without the slightest trouble.

To give an exact number for any breed is worse than useless and misleading, but as most of our matings are made up for best results, both as to fertility and strength of the product hatched from the eggs, much must depend on observation, for it is pretty nearly as bad to undermate as to overmate, for in the first case a strong male bird will worry the females till he gets them down on the legs, and in the second instance he will weaken himself.

It is not often mentioned that a male may run with fifty females and yet in some such cases a good proportion of the eggs will be fertile, because he will only give attention to the few hens in the flock that are productive, and the hens themselves will keep out of his way. My reason for mentioning this is because oftentimes the small breeder has only one splendid male bird, and he would like to mate him to as many females as possible and get as many fertile eggs as he can.

Now, early in the season it is not likely that all the females will be laying, but that they will come on, as is always the case, little by little, and at this time it will cause no trouble if a strong male is mated to a greater number of females than is usual, as his attentions will only be given to the layers.

If the whole flock is shelling out eggs as fast as they can, this course cannot be followed, but that is rather the exception than the rule during the months of February and March.

As to health, the birds must be in full possession of it, as no results can be expected where the breeding stock lacks in this respect. The females should be in a good active condition, in good flesh, but not fat; a flock of over-fed lazy hens will not be likely to fill the egg basket, and after having taken on a surplus of fatty matter it is hard to get rid of, as it will cause inactivity, which is sure death to the successful establishment of the breeding pen.

Some of the smaller breeds do not get fat. No matter how much is fed them their active disposition will hinder that condition, but all the larger breeds, including all the American varieties, will fatten easily if over-fed, and as a consequence become useless as breeders. When the stock is in full lay they will not fatten readily if the proper food is given them. The period which needs the most care in this respect is when the stock is ready to lay, yet lingers and sings, as a pullet sometimes will, for several weeks before she lays the first egg.

Too much attention cannot be given to the matter of plenty of good water and green food. I believe that not only the number of eggs laid, but the fertility of them, largerly depends on providing well for the birds in this respect, and observations show how important this matter is.

The largest egg yield is given us early in the spring when the snow leaves and the grass becomes green and tender. Now, all we have to do is to watch our birds, and we will find that they will leave their usual rations and fill themselves full with the first spears of the growing grass, which simply shows that their system craves this food more than any other, however good it may be.

Green food can be provided in the season by getting the snow off the ground in some southern exposure, and there are a number of succulent vegetables that will provide green food most all winter, and enough to supply a few breeding pens with plenty.

Cabbage is not too dear at any price, as it provides well the craving of nature for green food, and there is nothing better. A few apples will be relished and provide a change. Beets, turnips, carrots, in fact everything in the way of eatable roots will answer, but the green leaf of the cabbage and the early spears of the grass are most preferred.

Soft food we deprecate in the breeding pen. It is not conducive to exercise and impairs digestion more or less, and is a means of forcing for eggs, which, of course, should never be done where the eggs are to be used for hatching. A natural coming into laying by the females will, when they get started, induce a steady supply, and they will be strongly fertile, with a germ that has a kick in it, and which will produce a chick that comes into the world with a good intention to live and begin life without that tired feeling that generally ends fatally.

Much complaint is heard every season from persons buying eggs for hatching that they have had very poor results, or none at all, which is generally the cause of improper care of the eggs, if previous condition of the stock is all right.

A suitable place should be selected, not too warm and not too cold. If very warm during the day and very cold at night is the condition under which the eggs for hatching are kept, the result most likely will be addled eggs when put under the hen or in the incubator.

An even temperature of from 40 to 50 degrees is the most suitable in which to store eggs for any length of time that are to be used for hatching. And if early in the season eggs should be collected often, in fact before they turn cold, as they chill easily early in the season when it is still freezing weather. Every year we have marked eggs that were very cold to touch with a C, which stood for chilled, and up to date none of them, though the germ would start, ever produced a chick at hatching time.

The practice of continually turning eggs that are to be used for incubation we consider useless. It simply disarranges the contents of the eggs and injures the fine membranes of its composition. We have discarded this useless and positively harmful way, so long believed to be necessary, like a lot of other foolish superstitions prevalent among poultrymen. Handle the eggs carefully and place a cloth over them, which will hinder evaporation, and leave them alone.

It is claimed by some people that the hen turns the eggs every time she lays one. She does no such thing; she will go on the nest very carefully, lay her egg and leave the nest without hardly disarranging an egg. It is only when she is incubating the eggs, when the germ has started, that she turns them.

We have already hinted that close housing is not desirable, even though in some parts of the country cold weather persists during February and March. Give an abundance of fresh air, but remember that fresh air is not drafts going from one end of the house to the other. A yard of strong vigorous birds will want to get out on the coldest day, and they will do very much better for it. Coddling is not conducive to strong fertility, as all it does is to engender laziness, and this last is simply the beginning of the end, the end of eggs in any great numbers, and those gotten will not produce strong chicks.

A hen which has no more ambition than to stand around and shiver with her feathers on end when she ought to be scratching ought to be taken out of the pen and kept by herself, and given no other food than she will dig good and hard to get, and this treatment will reduce the flesh, or fat, I should say, and generally succeeds in making a hustler out of a good-for-nothing, and yet the hen is not alway to blame, for they are very much like humanity in getting as much as they can and for as little hard labor as they can, and many a flock of otherwise good fowls has been made useless by overfeeding and coddling.

Open up the windows, give air, plenty of it. When you do, there will be no wet walls in the poultry house, nor a lot of sneezing hens or hangarounds, but birds that will go singing to their work and look health and activity all over, and that means plenty of eggs, and fertile eggs, and strong chicks.

Whatever system of feeding is employed stick to it, providing it contains all the necessary nutrients for egg production, and if the hens are laying pretty well, whatever you do don't shift from one kind of feeding to another, for you will simply stop the hens from laying.

They do not take readily to a radical change of food, and though I believe in a variety, this can be done by adding a little today and some other little tomorrow, but if you want to try the "dry feed plan" begin it with the chickens and not with a lot of hens, for they will not take to it readily and will certainly leave you without eggs, for a spell at least.

There are so many poultrymen so fond of trying things, but it is unwise to try anything except we try it in the right way, and when eggs are wanted for hatching, and lots of them, that certainly is not the time for experimentation.

As to the ages of the birds, we have something to say which is of vital importance if continued success is to be maintained. Young and immature birds are not fit to breed from. There is no power on earth that can retain the strength, size and vigor in any breed if a succession of cockerel and pullet matings is resorted to.

I always maintained that a pullet would make a breeder if she was hatched late in February or the first day of March of the previous season, that is, when she is a full year old, but pullets younger than that make poor breeders, and how frequently these little runts are used, hatched late and used early, and all the care, and all the choice feeding you may resort to will never make matters rights.

Young full-sized hens, one and two years of age, will give results both as to feather and egg production which younger birds will seldom if ever do.

The same holds good with the male bird. Nothing less than a full year old, and not then, except he is well furnished with hackles and sickles, and at least a half spur, the emblems of sexual maturity.

The Make-up of the Breeding Pen.

This Most Important Matter Will Demand the Attention of Many Breeders this Month. Points to be Considered.

By B. S. Harmon.

THE breeding pen is to be made up and we proceed first to the selection of the females. Each female is examined in detail, and those that are nearly perfect are parted from those that are clearly defective. Then these good birds are gone over again and the best are separated from the merely good. Once more the best are gone over, and those which possess similar characteristics, especially of size, figure and coloration are placed together, for we desire to have the breeding females as uniform as possible in all respects. We demand that they be typical of the variety in shape and uniform in color and makings. And above all else in merely external characteristics we desire that they be feminine in appearance. We wish them to show their sex—not to look like a lot of hen-feathered cocks. In fowls, as in the human race, masculinity is not desired in the female sex. And yet they must be in vigorous health and show a certain robustness not incompatible with their femininity. Eyes must be bright and sparkling, combs and wattles a bright red, and the features free from any dead, rusty, faded appearance. Activity and vivacity in movement should be present. They should look and act as if they enjoyed life and living.

And the male bird, cock or cockerel, as the case may be, should be in appearance as clearly a male as his mates are clearly females. With a somewhat larger head, though free from unnecessary coarseness, with a good sized though not over-large comb, with a more robust figure, with sparkling eyes, vivid red comb and wattles, and lustrous plumage, the male should look masculine all over. The secondary characteristics, in due proportion to his breed, should be well developed sickles, saddle feathers and neck hackles, all indicating his sex. His crow should be clear, strong and lusty and he should crow frequently. While the crowing differs in different breeds and should be characteristic of the breed, yet in the brood cock it should have no suspicion of sluggishness. His movements should be active and his attention to his mates very marked. He should often be seen scratching and be heard calling them about him. With these general characteristics should be united those special ones which make him strengthen the points wherein the females are weak. If they are a trifle too narrow in chest, he should be a trifle too broad at this point, and so on throughout every section. In color he should possess just the shade and markings required to bring out in the young the desired coloration. This, of course, may in a breed like the Partridge Cochin, for illustration, cause the use of a male with a splashed or penciled breast, when the ideal show male should have one of solid black, but it is not an ideal show male but an ideal breeding male which is to be chosen.

A pen mated up in this way, provided the birds have been properly bred, so as to insure descendibly characteristics, will produce good utility and good exhibition stock—utility because the chickens will be vigorous, healthy, hearty, hardy and capable of giving a good account of themselves, and exhibition because they will be produced typical in shape, correct in color and markings, and have the health and vigor without which rich coloring—coloring that gleams and shines with its beautiful irridescence—is impossible. Health is the varnish that brings out the depth and richness of colors upon fowls. Health is the tonic that makes fowls able to grow, lay and be profitable. And health is dependent, at least for its foundation, upon proper mating.

A breeder should neglect nothing which will contribute to his success. Every little detail should receive his attention. But whatever he may neglect, he certainly can not afford to neglect the mating of his fowls. This is to his breeding operations what a foundation is to a house—on it everything else rests. The superstructure may be somewhat carelessly put together and yet stand, if the foundations are all right; but if the foundations are infirm, no matter how perfect the work on the superstructure may be, the edifice will come crashing down about the ears of the builder. Lay a firm foundation in the right make-up of the breeding pen.

Some January Pointers.

An Interesting and Appropriate Talk That All S. P. J. Readers Can Read with Profit.

By Observer.

DON'T write 1910 any longer. You will, though; see if you don't.

The Roman god, Janus, from whom this month takes its name, was represented with two faces, one looking forward and the other looking back.

January is a good time to look in both directions, back upon the past year to learn from its successes and failures, forward upon the year to come to plan new successes and to avoid, so far as possible, further failures.

Failures are perhaps inevitable. If one had his life to live over, he probably would avoid the mistakes which he has made, but that would not insure him against making other and perhaps equally as disastrous mistakes. But to make the same mistakes, year after year, is inexcusable.

Mistakes, profitably used, are even more valuable than successes, because while the latter beget in us a sense of false security and make us less alert than we should be, the former clearly show us our weaknesses and warn us against a repetition of them.

"I held it truth, with him who sings,
To one clear harp in divers tones,
That men may rise on stepping-stones
Of their dead selves to higher things."

So sang Tennyson, and the song is true upon a lower plane, for failures are but "stepping-stones" to successes, once their intent and content are measured, once the meaning of their teaching is understood. It will pay us to seriously study our failures and learn their causes.

But having learned the lessons of the past, our gaze should be straight forward. No more looking backward. The way may not be clear, but to see its obstructions and avoid or overcome them we must have the gaze directed in the right direction. Like the engineer upon his locomotive, our eyes must be upon the track over which we are to pass so that we can signal for more speed or "down brakes" as the exigency may require.

Have you won enough prizes to satisfy you, or are you like one whose "appetite had grown by what it fed on?" If you are still prize-hungry, you will have a chance to feed your appetite, for poultry shows are as plentiful in January as blackberries in September. Perhaps that statement is exaggerated just a trifle, but let it pass. You understand that all that is intended to be conveyed is that January is a good show month. We iterate the advice, we have given at other times and in other places, to patronize the poultry shows. Go in person, if possible, and remember the maxim, "I can because I think I can;" send—no, bring—your birds; induce others to do the same; help the show to be a success. "Lend a hand;" don't be a mule. Kicking may do for unreasoning creatures, but not for a man. The show officers, at a sacrifice of time and labor, and often of money, are doing their best to help you. Can you do less than to second their efforts by good wishes expressed in friendly words? I know that they will appreciate it if you do, for I have had experience as a poultry show officer.

Don't bother the secretary unnecessarily. He is doing his level best to have everything done right and on time. Your question will hinder him just so much. It would be a small matter if you were the only person who did this, but you are "E pluribus unum," one out of many, and to have his work interrupted by many interested persons means considerable loss of time and does not tend to make it more accurate. If the secretary is left alone, he will get his work done, and well done, but if he is subjected to many interruptions his mistakes will be due not to his carelessness but to your thoughtlessness.

There is the show nuisance; do you know him? He is the fellow who stands in the aisle and "spiels" about his birds at home, which are superior to anything on exhibition. "Call them good ones? You orter see mine at hum! Gee! They'd make these look like dunghills. They could beat anything here to a standstill." If you timidly ask why he didn't bring them, he will inform you, "'Taint no honor to compete with scrubs. To win here wouldn't count nothin'." And he moves on to sing the same old song in the same old words to the next person he can get to listen to him. Such nuisances ought to be abated, but it's a free country and the nuisance has paid to get in. What is to be done? Nothing, perhaps, except to fill one's ears with cotton and so save the wear upon one's eardrums.

Use good common sense when you get your birds home. They have been closely confined in small coops for about a week. The hall has been warm and unless care is used the birds may take cold. If one would give each bird a two-grain quinine pill, when it arrived at its home, and a good warm mash for its first meal, some of the colds, so common to birds which have been on exhibition, might be avoided. In a day or two they will probably be all right. Even if there is an occasional loss, much as it may be regretted, it pays to exhibit—pays the exhibitor through his winnings, and helps the industry by the interest it creates in fine fowls.

If you breed Asiatic fowls, and have suitable quarters in which to rear very early chickens, a few eggs may be set this month. The writer does not approve of such early chickens, because of the extra labor which they entail, but some wish for and will have them. Remember that eggs, as a rule, will not be so fertile now as they will be some months hence—that a much smaller percentage will hatch—and that, with the high prices of eggs and their diminished fertility, each chicken hatched will represent considerably more money than those hatched later. It is, therefore very necessary to hatch all the hatchable eggs and rear all the chickens hatched. If hens are set, fewer eggs should be given to each so as to reduce the chances of their becoming chilled to the minimum. A hen, which could be given twelve eggs in May with safety, should now have but eight or nine. And when the hen does hatch, the brood with its mother should be removed to a room where there is a good sized window, so placed as to allow plenty of sunlight. If incubators and brooders are used, the necessary appliances will have been provided, and the owner will see to it that the proper degree of warmth is retained.

How to Get High Prices for Eggs.

A Successful Market Poultryman Tells How He Did It and Discloses Some Valuable Helps.

By W. H. Mathews.

FRESH eggs are and always will be scarce in the cities. Consequently there will always be a big demand for them. How wide this demand is may be seen from any list of such places as hotels, clubs, drug stores, hospitals and sanitariums, exclusive boarding houses, bachelor apartment houses, private families, both wealthy and otherwise, and the best of the retail produce stores. The list might be lengthened indefinitely and the same list could be used as one for any other poultry product. All those I mention have come in my own experience. Perhaps the only one needing explanation is that of the bachelor apartment house and in those, I understand, such things as silver and golden fizzes, etc., eggs a la creole or other chafing dish concoctions are made. At that, my understanding is that a silver fizz is not made in a chafing dish at all, but in what is sometimes vulgarly called a bar glass.

However, to get back to egg prices, I detail below several of my own experiences in the hope that they may prove either a gentle hint or a forcible reminder to others as to where to get the best prices for eggs.

Several years ago, late one evening, I stepped into a drug store in Boston. While there, a large auto stopped outside, a man walked briskly from it into the store.

"Mr. Blank," he said to the druggist, "my wife just told me we have no eggs for my breakfast. Please let me have two."

Two eggs were wrapped up, the man paid 20 cents and departed. Noticing the amount on the cash register, I remarked on it to the druggist.

"I made nothing on that sale," he replied, "that is what they cost me."

After explaining the reasons for my interest I was asked into the office for a talk. Later I gave references and went out of the store with the understanding, later carried out, that if the references turned out O. K. I was to ship a stated number of eggs at given intervals at prices ranging from 60 cents to $1.20 per dozen, depending on the time of year. Also I carried the name and address of the man who had purchased the two eggs. He proved to be the owner of one of the large Boston department stores and a visit to him and later to his wife resulted in orders for a given number of dozen eggs per week at 25 cents above the wholesale market price as quoted in the papers the day the eggs were delivered. In return I guaranteed freshness, weight and safe delivery. Later the same arrangement was made with this man's brother's family, also that of his mother and also with several families related to the wife.

It was through the latter that I received a very flattering offer for all my eggs, which offer was unique in one way. I received a letter from a physician of whom I had never heard, asking me to call on him when I was in Boston. Some time later I did so. I was met by the query:

"Do you believe in insurance?"

"I do," I replied.

"So do I. Therefore, I want to make a contract with you for all your eggs."

"Put me wise," I said, trying to get the connection.

"I am the owner of a private hospital. I know your eggs from seeing them at the Blank's. I have many wealthy women patients in the hospital who have imaginary nerves. Figure out for yourself the extent and all the colors of the black eye I'd get from one bad egg served to one nervous, gossipy patient. I can't get fresh eggs and I jump every time a woman asks for one. I can't even prescribe them. I want you to insure me against all that by contracting with me for all your eggs. What's your price?"

"You might kick at it."

"No, I wouldn't. It would all go in on the bills. Hurry up. I'm busy. What's your price?"

"I'm sorry, but I can't take you," I was forced to reply. "There are many reasons, but two of them are first, that all my eggs go now, and second that such a contract would interfere in the hatching season."

"Dump the other customers and then make your price cover the trouble at the latter season."

"Can't do it."

"Well, you're foolish, for some one else will. Good day."

And some one else did, as I learned later.

But perhaps the best customer in the lot is a butler. He was for years with an old bachelor whose breakfast the year round was two boiled eggs, one slice of toast and a large cup of coffee. I supplied him for a long time with two dozen eggs a week. On the death of the bachelor the butler went to a new place and my eggs followed with a big increase per week. After he left there the order remained and a new order was added from a third house. Also a fellow butler became a convert. These men were never paid a commission or remuneration in any form.

Once I asked my butler friend about it. He's an Englishman some sixty years old, and some dignified; in fact dignity oozes out all over him.

"Perhaps you don't know, sir," he replied, "but my duties keep me in the dining room at meals. Much of the time I stand close to the master's chair. It's not so much on his account, sir, but think how I'd feel if the master was to break a bad egg under my nose. I'm quite delicate that way, sir, and I'm sure I could not stand it."

Most people are "quite delicate that way" and if poultrymen will remember that and also remember that a wealthy man does not figure 30 cents much for his breakfast, they will find little difficulty in getting the fine trade. And the fine trade where eggs are concerned is quite anxious to be found out.

Care must be taken in the handling and delivery of eggs and if the orders vary from the standard sizes of cases, one dozen size cartons of good material and attractive appearance should be used. Besides, the cook or chef is your best friend and small cartons are handier for the cook to handle and it pays to humor him in that way. As a general thing, I think that a carton costing one cent will add five cents to the price to be secured from the eggs.

Owing to the fact that many poultry keepers cannot be relied upon to stick to their own eggs but continually "fill out" with outside eggs, it will frequently be found that the large hotels, clubs and restaurants are looking for new sources of supply. Once they find a source will not be and is not contaminated by "outside eggs," bought cheaply and sold for fancy hennery, they will stick to that source. Most of them had as soon pay the same amount of money directly for eggs as to do what many are compelled to do now, pay less and then use valuable space, and hire a man to lamp out table eggs. Life is too short and city floor space is too dear to allow the downtown hotels to use it thusly from choice.

How to Get Plenty of Eggs in Winter.

What to Feed and How to Feed It. Other Methods of Care Which Have Much to do With Successful Winter Egg Production.

By H. V. Tormohlen.

THE natural time of the year for the hen to lay is in the spring and summer, but any variety or breed of fowls so popular today can be made to produce eggs during the dead of winter with proper care and feeding. Certain natural desirable characteristics have been fostered and intensified, though, by selection and mating until there are now breeds that excel in some particulars over others.

When the demand for eggs exceeds the supply the price of eggs advances as a natural consequence. The egg farmer has solved the problem and has made the getting of eggs a scientific certainty when the prices are high, much to his profit. The family keeping just a few hens may do the same thing and make the average egg yield per hen even greater, because fowls do better in smaller numbers and better attention can be afforded the small flock.

The egg farmer places his fowls under conditions as nearly like spring as possible with the exception of the temperature, as it has been found that hens do not require warm quarters. They thrive in dry, windproof quarters without drafts and with as much sunshine and fresh air as possible. He feeds them a well balanced ration, which is as near like the hens would get were they roaming about over broad fields in the summer time. The bugs and worms the fowls get during the summer play quite an important part in influencing the egg yield.

To take the place of the bugs and worms some form of meat must be fed. Some one of the by-products of beef is the cheapest and most satisfactory. In isolated country districts milk can be fed to advantage, but milk is almost as hard to obtain and as high-priced as eggs for the average city or town dweller. The packing houses are near though, and beef scraps or dried beef blood prepared especially for chickens can be obtained at any of the seed or feed stores at very reasonable rates when purchased in 100 pound bags and fed as easily as grain.

Beef scraps are superior to dried blood. If of good quality it will keep indefinitely if kept dry. Its appearance is hardly what the name might suggest, as the scraps after being cooked thoroughly tender are ground into coarse bits so it can be fed in the mash. Mix the mash in the following proportions by emptying the meal on a clean floor or have the feed man do it before delivery and shoveling it about, dry, until thoroughly mixed. Keep the feed in barrels away from rats and feed as needed by scalding a sufficient quantity for the flock. A good mixture is as follows: Chop feed, 40 lbs.; middlings, 22 lbs.; bran, 22 lbs.; beef scraps, 15 lbs.

Chop feed is composed of half and half oats and corn ground together. Middlings is a by-product of wheat flour—the heart or middle of the wheat and the richest part, but which modern milling methods has decreed shall not go into the flour, sacrificing nutritive properties for whiteness. Bran is the hull or outer covering of wheat.

Chickens must have some kind of green food along with their grain and meat food during the winter if many eggs are expected. Beef scraps, green cut bone, blood meal or chopped raw beef will take the place of the bugs and worms they pick up during the summer, but something must also be provided to take the place of the tender blades of grass picked here and there. Grains are too concentrated in themselves to form the whole diet for fowls. With a crop filled with nothing but grains the starch in them becomes pasty and sticky after becoming moist and will not move along easily through the fowl's peculiarly formed alimentary canal unless there is some bulky substance mixed with the food. In fact, it requires very much less food if bulky green foods of some kind are fed regularly and, of course, they are much cheaper.

At first thought it would seem almost impossible to have a supply of green food during the winter in our northern and central states without considerable cost. There are several different ways of supplying this part of the ration, though. Apple parings and cabbage leaves which would otherwise be wasted in the kitchen can be chopped up with a vegetable cutter in pieces small enough for the fowls to swallow, and they form an excellent substitute for the grasses of summer. Heads of cabbage may be hung up in the scratching shed so the fowls will be required to jump for them. This also provides exercise. Care should be taken, though, not to feed too much cabbage, as it will give the eggs a peculiar flavor. If turnips are plentiful they also may be fed in this manner. In the last few years alfalfa has been placed upon the market in the form of a dry bulky meal for poultry. A quantity of the meal is scalded with hot water the night before it is intended for use. It turns as green as grass as soon as it is scalded, but it should be left covered tightly for several hours. It should then be mixed with mash food to form about one-fourth of the quantity of the bulk.

Pure, clean clover hay is equally good chopped up and scalded and fed in this manner or a bale of clover hay may be left in some out-of-the-way place for the fowls when it will soon be found the leaves will all be picked from the stems. Then the bale may be torn apart. It will surprise some to think of fowls eating hay, but they will actually eat all the leaves of the clover stems, so much do they relish bulky food. The cow beet or mangle wurzel form a very cheap and efficient green food for poultry, but they can scarcely ever be purchased on the market. If you want a supply of green food for your fowls for next year sow a small quantity of the seed along in July or engage some farmer to grow some for you. If you live in the suburbs possibly there is a hothouse near which grows lettuce during the winter. The waste leaves may be obtained at small cost. Sprouted oats or wheat makes another good form of green food for winter use. The grain is soaked in luke warm water over night and then placed in a shallow box or pan in a two-inch layer and the box kept in a moderately warm temperature for ten days or two weeks or until the young plants reach a height of two or three inches.

Some Random Thoughts.

By H. S. Babcock.

A certain writer defines breeding of fancy fowls as "breeding with particular reference to points which have no bearing on the practical usefulness of the breed," and then draws the sage conclusion that "the breeding of 'fancy' poultry is, therefore, a system of breeding for non-essentials." How wonderful are the ways of logic!

Once in a while a man is found brave enough to defend the mongrel hen. It is well, for if anything in this world and in this age of the world, when the thoroughbred cock crows in nearly every backyard and the thoroughbred hen cackles in every hamlet needs defense, it is the mongrel hen.

It is better to know one thing thoroughly than to know many things partially. The man of one idea is the man that the times demand. This is the day of the specialist, the day, not of general culture, but of thorough, though limited knowledge. A specialist may not be an entertaining companion but he is the man whom you consult when you wish to know anything about his specialty. In poultry breeding the men who stick to one variety seem to be the men who are making the most money out of their fowls. Whether they get the most pleasure out of their business may be open to debate. But that is another story.

Without a definite standard the judging of fowls would be a farce; without competent judging poultry exhibitions would be a failure; without poultry exhibitions no distinctive breed of fowls would long exist in its purity.

Fashions in fowls, like fashions in everything else, animate or inanimate, change from time to time. Ideals, practically realized, must be pushed to a farther point, so that they may remain ideals, and this progress in ideals is the cause of change in the fashions in fowls.

Even in eggs is the influence of fashion seen. One market demands a white, another market a brown egg, or in other words, white eggs are fashionable in one place and brown eggs are fashionable in another place.

Each nation sets the fashions in fowls for itself. In England the Leghorn is beefy, in America slighter in build, more graceful and airy.

Here is a recommended recipe for making a wet mash. Fill a suitable vessel nearly full of fresh water and add one quart of whole plump oats; after the oats have soaked about five hours, add one quart of ground beef scraps; the next morning, twenty-four hours after the oats were put in soak, add one quart of corn meal, and from one to two quarts of wheat bran. Stir until the ingredients are thoroughly intermixed and the mash is reasonably stiff. Then feed. The hens and chickens like it, and the former will show their appreciation of it by laying freely, while the latter in their rapid growth will testify as to its good qualities. Fine grit or fine oyster shells may be added occasionally with advantage.

Cleanliness is next to success, but always a little in advance of it.

Cleanliness is not good health, but a condition of good health. Healthy fowls may be found in nasty surroundings; they are pretty certain to be found in clean ones.

It is with chickens, as it is with dahlias, that the best is the kind to raise. There is some degree of beauty in the low-bred sorts of both, but when they are compared with the best this beauty pales into insignificance. One is, relatively speaking, wasting his time in cultivating and rearing the inferior sorts.

Condemn a fancier because he follows the fashions in fowls? No, sir. For by the same token you would condemn the practical poultryman who follows the fashion in the color of eggs and in the color of the skin and shanks of market poultry; you would condemn every business practice, every industrial method. Everywhere fashion rules and the hard-headed practical man, as well as the fancier, and as truly and fully obeys. "The butcher, baker and the candlestick maker" are all governed by the decrees of fashion in their several occupations. Condemn the fancier? Not on your life.

There are three cardinal principles in successful poultry keeping and they are: first, cleanliness, second, cleanliness, and third cleanliness.

If you haven't tried it, just try soaking oats in water for twenty-four hours and using them as one of the ingredients of the wet mash. You will be pleased with the results.

Do everything that needs to be done, when it needs to be done. Don't delay for a single day, but, as you may, do right away, ere set of sun, what must be done, is, so they say, the only way to make fowls pay.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL
FOR STANDARD BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO RAISE IT

JANUARY, 1911

Subscription price, 50 cents per year, except in Chicago, Canada and foreign countries, where, on account of increased postage, the price is 75 cents per year.

Advertisements not of an objectionable nature will be inserted at reasonable rates. Rate card and discounts mailed to all applicants promptly on request.

All subscriptions are immediately discontinued at the expiration of the time for which they have been paid. An X opposite this paragraph means that your subscription has expired and you will not receive the next number unless you renew promptly.

The instruction found in the columns of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is the best and most reliable that money can buy, and that the most practical and successful poultrymen of America can produce. The Journal is therefore a school for the amateur and a help to the expert, and neither can afford to be without it.

We want agents everywhere, and will pay liberally for good workers. Write us for terms.

For the year 1911, SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL guarantees an average monthly circulation of 30,000 copies.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is a monthly magazine of national circulation and advertisers secure a profitable business from all sections. Changes of ads must be received not later than the 15th of the month, and new ads the 20th, in order to insure insertion in the month following.

SUBSCRIBERS GUARANTEED AGAINST LOSS.

It is the policy of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL to accept advertisements from only thoroughly honorable poultrymen and business firms. Great care is taken in this respect. We therefore guarantee all our subscribers against loss through deliberate fraud on the part of any display advertiser in our columns. If by chance any subscriber should be swindled in this way we will make good his loss if within 30 days from the time of sending his order to the advertiser he will furnish proof that will enable us to convict the advertiser of intentional fraud, and provided the subscriber proves to us that when writing to the advertiser he stated that the ad was seen in SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL.

Before selecting a breed make a careful study of it to see that it will meet your requirements. Frequent changes in breeds prevent the association of the name of the breeder with that of the breed, one of the most powerful factors in profitable advertising. Yet, if you do make a mistake, make the change as speedily as possible, make your new selection with greater care, and let the public know it. You will need to advertise the change forcibly so as to make the public forget your first choice and associate your name with your second choice.

The New Year

Quickly on the heels of disappearing Christmas arrives New Year's Day. Perhaps it is well that New Year's Day comes so closely upon Christmas. In the general feasting of that universally observed day, many have been so indiscrete as to overeat, and the knowledge of the consequences is too fresh to have been forgotten. Their condition makes them ripe for resolutions, and the time seems auspicious for their making.

New Year's Day in this part of the world is entitled to the name of Resolution Day. On that day we begin, or think we do, our life anew. It is vain to argue that every day should be a day for making new resolutions and that one day is as appropriate as another for this purpose. It is useless to point to the lists of resolutions made on previous New Year's Days, broken, shattered and shivered into small pieces in a few weeks succeeding. It is unavailing to assert that a resolution, the making of which is postponed to some future set day, is already broken in prospect. The New Year will come and new resolutions will be made.

We, therefore, suggest that something like the following, to be changed as circumstances may demand, be the form and order of the new resolutions:

Resolved, 1—That I will write out in a fair, legible hand all the resolutions made this day, post them up in some conspicuous place and read them frequently and at stated periods.

2—That during the coming year I will do all that I can to promote the interests of the poultry industry by renewing my subscription to the poultry papers promptly; by paying up all scores which have been carelessly left unsettled; by studying the poultry journals I receive so as to learn the experience and practice of others; by putting such experience and practice to the test in my own operations; by learning all that I can from every source about the business, from periodicals, books, experience and observation; by attending promptly to every detail of my business; by contributing to the poultry journals anything which I may learn that I think will be interesting or helpful; by supporting poultry clubs, poultry shows and all organizations for the promotion of the industry; by not resorting to underhand methods or sharp practices in order to get ahead, being fully convinced that these are the certain means of ultimate defeat.

3—That, as the above resolutions are made voluntarily, I will try to keep them faithfully, and as experience may show the need of adding to them, I will as such need appears, without waiting for another year to roll around, make the necessary additions.

And on our own part we do resolve to do as we have done in the past, to make this journal as instructive and interesting in each issue as we can, and especially to make it profitable to every one of its patrons. Our ideal for the journal is a high one and as we approach its realization the ideal advances with equal steps. We shall never be satisfied with it until it is perfect in every detail, but, though we shall remove each discovered imperfection as it is discovered, so far as the same lies in our power, the day of full perfection must necessarily be far distant, even impossible of attainment. But what would one have? A journal good at the start, and growing better with each issue, is about as much as one can reasonably expect.

With this resolve, renewed every day on our part, we wish out patrons a year of unbounded success and prosperity, which will be for them assuredly A Happy New Year.

The Need of Poultry Journals.

There are published in this country many poultry journals, of varying degrees of excellence and supported by widely differing numbers of subscribers and advertisers. Many of these journals are of a high type of excellence, both in mechanical make-up and in the character of their contents. In paper, type, illustration and literary matter they compare favorably with the best of trade or specialty publications. Unless there were a need of them they would not and could not exist. What is that need?

They are needed because the poultry industry is a growing and progressive industry. A book can record the status of an industry only as it exists at the time of its publication. Good books are undoubtedly of value, but there is no way to keep them up to date except by publishing supplements or new editions. But the poultry journal, appearing at regular intervals—usually once a month—can record for the benefit of its readers each new discovery when it is new. The poultryman is thus enabled to keep abreast with progress in his industry and is able at once to avail himself of the latest timely hint or suggestion which makes for success in his avocation.

They are needed, also, to arouse enthusiasm in the work of breeding fowls. There are many dry details and much confining work in carrying on the poultry business. Human nature, being what it is, needs a certain amount of stimulation to help it over the hard and uninteresting parts of the work all poultrymen must do. The enthusiasm, which is aroused by the knowledge of others' successes and which the poultry journals can alone supply, compels many to keep on and win success, who otherwise would give up and add their names to the list of failures.

The poultry journals, also, furnish a means of bringing sellers and buyers of poultry together, especially of the sellers and buyers of high class thoroughbred stock. If one had to depend upon the limited market in his own immediate vicinity for sales, comparatively few would be made, and the high prices now obtainable for the best birds seldom or never would be realized. The advertising columns, though they furnish but little entertainment and to an uninterested reader appear unattractive, are consulted by hundreds and thousands of readers who find therein just what they need. Nor can any other class of papers meet, in this respect, the wants of the poultryman, for good prices for good birds can be obtained only from those who have been educated to appreciate that a good bird is worth a good price.

They help to educate the readers, not only in the value of thoroughbred stock, but in the finer things which make for intellectual happiness. If one will look over the contents of this journal for a single year and note the variety of subjects treated, the clear and able manner in which they are discussed and the literary finish of many of them, he will understand that the intelligent reading of them must result in a considerable degree of culture. This can be said without egotism, for reference is made not to our work, but to the admirable work of our corps of contributors. But the educational work does not end simply with the reading, for it enables many a man to find himself and his power of expression. As Bacon says, "Reading maketh a full man, conference a ready man, and writing an exact man." The poultry breeder, if anybody, needs to be "an exact man," and the poultry journals afford a field for the exercise of writing which develops exactness in thought and work. Every year brings out one or more new writers, all of whom are helped by their efforts and some of whom develop a remarkable talent. Without the existence of the poultry journal the probabilities are that these talented writers would have never found the power of expression, and they and the world would have been poorer for it.

The poultry exhibition is a powerful influence in sustaining the poultry industry and especially the fancier's side of that industry. But the poultry exhibition would languish and decline if it lacked the support of the poultry press. In the press are found its prospective announcements and a record of its work. By the press the breeders are induced to breed and show the fine specimens which make a poultry exhibition so useful. And while it is possible that sporadic poultry shows might be held even without the assistance of the poultry press, the regular, numerous, annual dignified exhibitions would probably be impossible.

The poultry journals serve also to dignify the industry. If an industry is looked upon as mean, little and contemptible, if it is regarded as something to be apologized for, it will attract persons of inferior mind and character. But if it has a strong specialty press back of it, sustained by earnest men, contributed to by able men, and edited by honest men who realize its importance, the industry will become more esteemed and attract to it the best classes of men. There was a time, not so far distant as not to be recalled by the oldest breeders, when the poultry business was regarded as adapted only to women and children, when a fancier was regarded as a fanatic, and when the poultry press had not made its influence felt. Contrast those days with the present when the industry is regarded as honorable and honored, when many of the ablest men engage in it, and when the poultry press flourishes like a green bay tree.

If for these, and other reasons, the poultry press is needed, what ought to be our attitude toward it? Ought it not to receive the most liberal support from us all? If every one interested in poultry could realize the need of the poultry journal its subscriptions would increase by leaps and bounds, its advertisers multiply indefinitely, its contributors be eager to help along the good work, and everybody be loud in the praise of what it has done, is doing and will continue to do. And such support would return again to the supporters, like "bread cast upon the waters," in more interesting, useful and helpful issues on the monthly day of publication.

The way to grow chickens profitably is to keep them growing.

The man who is perverse enough to prefer crossing to the breeding of any given breed, should seek to make crosses from breeds of similar colors. For example, White Wyandotte and Rose Combed White Leghorn, or Single Combed Brown Leghorn and Partridge Cochins. In this way more uniformity in color will be obtained than in violent color outcrosses, like black and white or barred and buff.

The tenth annual winter poultry course at the Connecticut Agricultural College, Storrs, Conn., will begin February 14, and terminate March 24th. As in the past, this course will be strictly practical and the students will be given every opportunity to take part in the practical work on the College Poultry Plant. The necessary expenses of each student may be kept at a very low figure. A complete college catalogue and special short course bulletin may be secured by addressing Prof. F. H. Stoneburn, Storrs, Conn.

Women's Department

WHAT A WOMAN CAN DO.

I have noticed with special interest Mrs. Ellis' article in this department of S. P. J., last month. I believe that farmers' wives could be a great benefit to the poultry industry if they could be induced to make more of a business of poultry raising. Business methods mean success in poultry raising to every man and woman who will make a little extra effort all along the line. Experience is the best teacher. But why spend years in experimenting alone when so many people are able and willing to help us to success by giving us their experience, and when we have such helps as SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL and other good papers. But, strange to say, we find many who call themselves enthusiastic and successful farmers who do not have a poultry book or paper in their homes and who have a flock of scrub fowls running over their farm. The birds are fed heavy grain and nothing else all winter, and water is considered altogether unnecessary. These statements are not exaggerated in the least. I am a woman of much over fifty years and have spent most of my life among farmers in different parts of three states and I know what I am talking about. I have never been in position to do much to help the good cause along, except to give my experience freely to those who seem most n need of it. I hand my JOURNALS and all clippings worthy of notice to every one I can and then am often much chagrined to learn they had simply looked at the pictures and laid the book away, never reading a word.

I hold that women are better adapted for poultry raising than the farmer himself, for hens are generally quite near the house, and many times a day a woman's work calls her near the hen house, enabling her to keep her eye on the fowls without making any extra efforts. She can see if the water supply is diminished or has become warm in summer time or frozen in winter. In either case, she can attend to this one important point with but few extra steps, and, again, she is the one that has control over the surplus of garden and cellar supplies and table scraps, wherein lies one secret of success, both to the health and happiness of her birds and a great reduction in the feed bill, and from where she can fill her egg basket and raise the largest and finest meated fowls; she has the advantage of the farmer in being able to watch the flock more closely and in thereby being able to give the birds better care.

My friends say that I know just how many feathers each hen has on her body. I am not as bad as that, but I at least am not liable to kill my neighbor's best Barred Rock hens and eat them, not knowing but that they are some of my old scrubs, which is the way I have been treated at times.

I have one hen now that laid from Oct. 29, 1909, until Nov. 10, 1910, only missing eleven days during the entire time, and she has shown no signs of broodiness at any time. She came through the moult with a light loss of feathers and her head showed a good red all the while. I manage to have a flock of hens laying all the time—when one lot quits, another commences. I sell eggs at all seasons, while many around me haven't seen an egg for two months. My feed bill is small as compared with many others. Here is where the women can make good over the men. What one has done, another can do. I am only a tenant on a large farm—my privileges are quite limited. All of my feed has to be bought, except what I can raise, so I put in a few seeds on every available spot,

How Money is Made in The Poultry Business

My Dear Reader: From my experience of over 20 years with all Branches of the Poultry Industry I candidly believe you can make Bigger Profits in a Shorter Time with Less Money and Less Risk in the Poultry Business than you can in any other business. You can become independent in it. But you cannot do it by the "Get-rich-quick" route. You cannot raise poultry on a five cent piece. One way to make money from poultry is to get the best equipment you can afford. One way to lose money is to get the cheapest you can buy. Knowing this, we determined to keep our Incubators and Brooders at the very front—to make them the Best in the world, and then sell them as low as possible. If you you get the Incubator of Quality. It is used by large, successful Poultry Farms, Duck Growers and Experiment Stations. It hatches alike in the hands of Women, Beginners, Experts and Farmers. It hatches the largest and strongest chicks, and more of them. We want every Poultry Man and Poultry Woman to succeed. Here are two examples of how they do succeed with the World's Best Hatcher. There is nothing wonderful about them. Just plain, everyday experience with the best incubator made.

HATCHES WINNERS THE FIRST TIME.

I am sending you photograph of the cock "Snowball," winner of first prize and Silver Cup for highest scoring bird in the Show, scoring 96½; also of the hen winning first prize, scoring 95¾; and the first prize pullet, scoring 95¼. All these winners, including highest scoring cockerel Fort Wayne, Ind., Show, 1910, were hatched in your Incubator.

This was my first experience with an incubator. It is easy to operate. A failure would be impossible. I never had better or stronger chicks. Have not lost over 3 per cent. I am so pleased that I will never go back to hatching by hens.

200 LAYERS KEPT MY FAMILY.

Vincentown, N. J. Aug. 13, 1910.

I run an eleven-acre farm and, would you believe it, my 200 layers kept my family of five. This is owing in great part to the use of your incubators. They are reliable, and I have had good success. I have hatched 95 per cent. and raised 90 per cent. to maturity. The chicks grow well—they are strong and healthy. The finish of your machine is very fine—it is elegant compared with others. Your thermostat is very accurate. The machine is perfectly self-acting and needs no application of water.

ARTHUR STIEBRITZ.

We make two leading lines of incubators. Our Standard Essex-Model—all Chestnut—the only hardwood incubator made; the highest grade incubator built anywhere by anybody. (Yet it is not the highest in price.)

We also build the most superior of low priced machines—of Enameled Rolled Steel with Chestnut Front.

Both these machines are worth more, but cost less; and they hold more eggs for the money than any other in their class.

nook and corner for my hens. I raise Egyptian wheat, sunflowers, buckwheat, sweet and pop corn, squash, pumpkins, turnips, carrots, beets, onions and beans. After taking out enough for the family, I have a good supply left, of which I wash clean, cut up fine and cook tender, season slightly, and sprinkle with a handful of corn meal or chopped feed. This constitutes their noon-day meal every day, except Sunday. I feed only one kind of vegetable at a time, then, too, I sort out very small and useless potatoes and bake them; any scraps of bread and flour, stale meals or cereals, with table scraps and useless greases. I put all together, with any kind of milk I can get, and bake in a large loaf. This often takes the place of grain in the morning, saving me at least two quarts of grain daily. My thirty hens cost me an average of $1.00 per month for grain. My egg yield from Christmas, 1909, until now, Dec. 15, has averaged me $1.50 per week, besides having all the eggs needed for family use. My pullets weigh six pounds and are laying all the time. I never feed one grain twice in succession. I feed corn, wheat, oats, barley, and ground feed, consisting of corn, barley and bran; sometimes ground oats, buckwheat meal and oatmeal, or any good horse feed; this last is before them at all times. They have charcoal, oyster shells and clean chaff and a quantity of sand and garden soil, which I stored before freezing weather.

Department of Practical Poultry Feeding

FEEDING BREEDING HENS FOR EARLY HATCHES IN FEBRUARY AND MARCH.

In writing this article I endeavor to present the question, "How to feed and care for stock to produce strong, healthy chicks." Many breeders try to check their breeding hens from laying in the early winter months—not because they desire more eggs when eggs for hatching purposes are wanted, but they wish to have them in first-class physical condition during the breeding season. They are not always successful in this, but by keeping them a little fat they generally keep the egg production below the point where it begins to tell on health and vigor. If my breeders moulted early and laid early and good in the winter, I would certainly endeavor to give them a few weeks rest before the breeding season. In some hens it does not make any difference at all, and these hens (if all other things are equal) the breeder should always pick out and keep by themselves so as to form a basis for foundation stock for utility and show purposes.

Good results can be obtained just as well on a city lot as on a 100-acre farm, but exercise, feed and care is required. Green food and meat should be furnished as needed, and the stock will produce just as good chicks as if on free range; but the birds must not be crowded. Considerable more room or space per hen should be allotted than for strictly laying hens for market use; stimulants of any kind should be barred out of the food for breeders. In our method for feeding White Wyandottes as breeders this rule is strictly adhered to every day:

Noon.	Night.
Mash	Wheat
Ground bone	Wheat
Wheat	Cracked corn
Mash	Wheat
Oats	Cracked corn
Ground bone	Wheat
No meal	Wheat and Cracked corn

Sugar beets, mangels and cabbages are always before the birds in boxes on wall. Grit, shells and charcoal in boxes.

Mixture No. 1, referred to above, consists of the following: No. 20 barley, No. 25 wheat, No. 20 oats, No. 15 sunflower seed, No. 20 millet.

Mash is composed as follows: For breeders, No. 80 hominy meal, No. 80 bran, No. 30 middlings, No. 10 Red Dog, No. 30 beef scraps, No. 20 linseed meal O. P., No. 45 cut alfalfa or clover, a little charcoal and salt.

In conclusion, prolificacy is considered in a different view than in treating of egg production; a hen may be an extra fine layer but a poor breeder. The points we must consider in a breeder are:

(a) Must be able to produce numerous and vigorous chicks of the general type.

(b) Breeding quality so as to stamp certain characteristic and individual qualities on offspring.

It is very hard to get an extra layer which can produce the desired

HOW TO INCREASE THE EGG PRODUCTION It has been demonstrated by careful tests made by poultry experts that HARDING'S GRANULATED MILK ALBUMEN has given an increased egg production of 30% to 40% over Beef Scrap. Keeps in any climate. Makes fowls healthy and productive.

results in large quantity of vigorous chicks, which when grown are up to the high standard of perfection.

In breeding high-class stock a generous, a very prepotent hen may be valuable as a breeder, though not specially prolific.

Fowls selected for the breeding pens should have strong constitutions and be in perfect health and should have never been seriously sick or badly out of condition.

Condition of your breeders is of the greatest importance.

Prevention and Cure of Disease

ROUP, CAUSES AND TREATMENT.

The season of roup is here. Without consulting any of the "authorities," I want to give the readers of this paper my own ideas of the cause, symptoms and treatment of this disease in poultry.

The two principle indirect causes of roup I believe to be cold and dampness; the direct cause I believe to be a specific germ developed under the above conditions. Dampness without cold will not cause it; if it did we would have it in hot weather, so that the main indirect cause is cold. How, then, does cold cause roup? First, the fowl or chick becomes chilled. Whenever the weather is cold enough for the bird to stand around with his feathers ruffled up, or in a drooping attitude from lack of vitality or lack of food, it is cold enough to get roup, and you will at once see that it does not have to be very cold for that. Whenever it is cold enough for a person to take cold it is cold enough for a chicken to take cold, and every time a chicken takes cold there is danger that it may terminate in a case of roup.

What is meant by taking cold? First, there is a gradual flow of blood to the different central organs of the body, but especially to the lungs, the increase of blood causing a congestion or too much blood, increases the amount of mucous secretion in the bronchial tubes, which is continued, is called catarrh. This calls for still more blood, and so the congestion is kept up. This catarrhal, congested condition of the tubes of the lungs and trachae soon forms a fertile field for the development of the roup bacillus or germ, and as soon as that little rascal is established your fowl has the roup.

What kind of chickens are most liable to get the roup? I do not mean by this question what variety, because any variety will take it under the above conditions. I mean, rather, what kind in regard to their physical condition. Any that are weakened from any other cause are liable to have it and first we may place the lousy chicken, lice weakened chickens probably more than all other causes combined. There is not one flock in a hundred that is free from lice. When a man (or a woman either) says they have no chicken lice on their place, I simply don't believe a word of it. When a man or a firm says he has a remedy that will kill all the lice without killing all the chickens, I say he or they are—well, I don't believe them, that's all. If it were possible to examine every feather on a chicken to be sure there was not one louse or one egg on it, I would then be satisfied of its freedom from lice; but nothing less than that would convince me; and that would have to be done with every chicken in the flock, and even then I would want to go over the poultry house and the soil with a magnifying glass before I would stake my reputation on saying the place was free from lice. Lice weakens chickens, and a weak chicken will take cold, and a chicken with cold is liable to have roup if the roup germ is lying around anywhere seeking what it may devour.

Diarrhoea from any other cause will weaken a chicken, and a weak chicken will take cold, etc.; same old round; anything which causes weakness or any illness predisposes to cold, and cold to roup. You never see a lively healthy looking chicken get the roup unless the house and surroundings become saturated with it, and then the conditions are so favorable for its propagation that they all get it. Yes, I believe it is contagious as diphtheria in the human family. You know there are always some people who do not take diphtheria; but even doctors are not safe, because all doctors are not healthy and being unhealthy they take the disease. You know it is proverbial that doctors seldom take contagious diseases, but if they had to live in it twenty-four hours in the day without taking any antiseptic precautions as most people do, they would be more liable; it is the same way with chickens—if we keep them all in one house, even all in one room, sick and well together, we need not be surprised when roup comes that all, or nearly all, have it.

Many cases are called roup that are not roup; and perhaps some persons would on the other hand deny its presence when they have it. It is not a good advertisement to let anybody know that your fowls have the roup, because, while roup is caused by weakness, it also causes weakness and a flock of birds that has been through the ravages of so fatal a disease is hardly fit to breed from; and the premises that have harbored the roup microbe is hardly a fit place to keep chickens in until it has been thoroughly cleaned up and fumigated.

But I find that this subject grows as I write, and for lack of time I shall have to defer giving more of it till next month. But enough has been said to show that the subject of roup opens up the whole subject of the proper management and care of poultry. If I can so stir up the readers of this journal that questions and answers can be brought forth for our mutual profit my object will be attained.

Inoculate Your Fowls Against Disease

The Poultryman's most terrible foes are Cholera, Roup and White Diarrhea. For these are Germ Diseases which breed with frightful rapidity. Inoculation with Oculum is the only sure cure.

Oculum is a wonderful new discovery that cures and prevents disease in fowls in the same way that inoculation gives human beings immunity from dangerous Germ Diseases.

"OCULUM"

Registered Trade Mark

Even the most advanced cases of Cholera, Roup and White Diarrhea have been cured with Oculum. Poultry men say it is successful beyond belief. Thousands of valuable birds are being saved every day by its use.

If you want healthy poultry, turkeys, pigeons, or other fowls, send for a bottle of Oculum and inoculate the whole flock as a preventative.

Recommends Oculum To Brother Fancier

The Hancock Inoculatum Co., Salem, Va.:
Gentlemen: I have given "Oculum" a thorough test and especially on a young cockrel, who had Diarrhea since he was hatched. He was such a beautiful bird I was anxious to save him as a future prize winner, and tried all remedies without avail. Oculum took about three weeks to cure him, but I may say at present writing he has been free from all signs of the disease for four weeks and is entirely cured. Inoculated 200 chicks and all 5 pens of Breeders. I consider it without equal for poultry and I would not be without it at any time. I have recommended it to all my brother fanciers.
Thanking you, I am very cordially,
P. J. ARMSTRONG, Sr.,
Proprietor Lawndale Orpington Yards.

Ask for Oculum at the store. If you cannot get it, send us dealer's name and 25c. for trial bottle or $1.00 for large bottle. If it fails to do all we claim, we'll return your money. Circular "A" and testimonials free on request.

CLOSE-TO-NATURE BROODERS AND INCUBATORS

The Close-To-Nature Incubators have the steady warmth of warm water and a ventilation that bathes the eggs in pure moist air without the air-drafts that dry out the eggs. An incubator that is sound, durable, dependable, and that is as close to nature as is possible in artificial hatching.

The Close-To-Nature Brooders are the most perfect imitation of the brooding hen ever yet devised, having the three Life Principles of Warmth by Conduction and Contact, Ventilation by Induction and Percolation, and Non-Crowding Invention. Solves the problem "hard to raise" by blending the Instincts of the broody hen with the Reason of man and satisfying every natural Impulse of the chick. Big roomy brooders for use in orchard and field and for cool and cold weather.

The Independent Hovers have the same Life Principles as the brooders and are for use without changes in big boxes and in sheds, the surest way to raise little chicks in mild weather or mild countries or larger chicks at any time anywhere. These hovers are a perfect simulation of the hen brooding her flock.

If you have never examined into the Close-To-Nature brooders there is a surprise for you in our catalog. You probably may have not heard much about this brooder for we have not spent thousands of dollars in advertising, but we have put a great deal of money into the brooder itself. These brooders are endorsed and used by the highest poultry authorities in the country. They are now in their fourth year and it is safe to say that probably no brooder ever brought out has met with such a genuinely friendly reception.

SPECIAL ITEMS FOR WINTER CONSIDERATION.

Winter, in our Northern latitudes, is a trying time for domestic fowls. Not only is the temperature such as to produce physical discomfort, but the earth is frost-bound and prevents the "scratching animal" from taking its customary exercise and from enjoying the refreshment of the dust bath. Insect life is absent and green food is wanting. And the fowls are subjected to a closer confinement than is consistent with their active natures. All the natural conditions are lacking and during several months chanticleer and his mates must lead a highly artificial life. The tendency of such conditions is to lower the constitutional vigor, interfere with the reproductive funtions and impair the fertility of the eggs produced. Adipose tissue is developed instead of muscle and the resistant force to disease is weakened.

In order to have the hens lay well and keep in good health the poultryman is obliged to provide what nature refuses to furnish, to mitigate the severity of the surroundings so far as possible, and reproduce, to the best of his ability, natural conditions. He must become a beneficent deity to his feathered dependents, and supply them with green, animal and grain foods, provide dusting places, and promote exercise, if he would have his laying stock produce eggs in abundance, and his breeding stock in proper condition for the next season's operations.

Winter care, therefore, assumes an immense importance. Its results do not end with the winter or with the present stock of fowls, but will be felt through the coming year and be seen in the next generation of chickens. Winter care holds the promise and potency of summer profit. Upon it depends the physical perfection of the chickens to be hatched, and through them of suceed-

NECESSARY ELEMENTS IN THE PRODUCTION OF THE 200-EGG HEN.

Much talk is heard relative to the "two hundred-egg hen," but we do not hear enough of the methods necessary to be pursued in caring for her in order to obtain such results. We also hear of laying strains made so by careful matings of the prolific layers of a flock with the sons of great layers. There is no doubt about having the "two hundred-egg hen" with us. Neither is there any doubt that this great layer has been created by careful matings from standard bred stock of special laying qualities. But these prolific layers, in the hands of practical poultrymen, will not lay two hundred eggs a year regardless of how they are cared for by the unpractical and careless. No matter what the qualities of a hen may be as a layer of eggs unless she is given a square deal she will not do her best. There is a law of recompense found in all things. A law as fixed as that of the Medes and Persians, that we cannot continue to indefinitely take from a given amount without exhausting the supply if we fail to add to while we substract from. Hens to do their best as egg producers must be supplied with the necessary resources from which to draw the required elements for the rapid manufacture of the product that goes to complete the eggs. She must at the same time have intelligent care and provision be made for her comfort and general well being.

A hen to be induced to lay two hundred eggs a year need not be coddled nor pampered beyond full and proper feeding and comfortable housing. But she must be taken care of. Must be given an abundance of good wholesome food and in a variety as she would select had she the material from which to choose. She should be given grains and seeds of different kinds placed or scattered where she can find them as she hunts. She should have mashes composed of ground grains, wheat bran, meat scraps, and cut green clover daily or several times a week. These mashes should be given warm in winter and cold in summer. She must have abundance of pure drinking water, contained in clean vessels, so placed that she can have access to it at all hours in the day. This water should be given warm in winter and cold in summer. She must have snug, dry and clean quarters in which to rest at night. These quarters must be free from draughts, unpleasant odors and vermin. In short they must be kept warm, dry and clean. She must have plenty of room in these resting quarters so that she may not be crowded and deprived of free access to that health giving element, oxygen. To obtain this latter there must be good ventilation. The opening at one side of house only. If yarded the year around there must be provided plenty of scratching room. Her dry food should be thrown in a deep, light, dry litter composed of straw or dead leaves, in which she can work all day. She must not be allowed from cover during rainy nor snowy weather. Neither should she be permitted to paddle about in the snow or mud at any time during the cold months. Her scratching quarters should have a southern exposure, the south side only, open and closed in by chicken wire so that, in winter, she will have the advantage of the sun's rays to keep her in health and her litter dry and aseptic. The litter should be removed several times during the year and replaced with new. The outside runs should be kept as clean as possible by frequent sweeping and an occasional spading. These runs should be provided with shade to protect from the excessive heat of summer.

It must be remembered that to induce a hen to lay two hundred eggs a year she must be kept laying in the winter months as well as in the spring and summer. Therefore to secure this, her surroundings and food must conform as nearly as possible to spring and summer conditions.

We must not forget that this hen must have plenty of dusting material. Coal ashes or road dust, in which she can take her daily dust bath, which is just as essential to the well being of hens as water baths are for the health, comfort and happiness of man.

To sum up: A hen to do her best as an egg producer must be comfortable the whole year around. Warm in winter and have shady, pleasant quarters in summer. Must be well fed on a variety of food, vegetable and animal. Must have plenty of pure water, shells and grit and kept free from lice and mites.

Following these simple rules I secured over 400 eggs from two S. C. Rhode Island Reds during their first laying year. These hens are now in their third year and are still giving a good account of themselves.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 429 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

MORE ABOUT THE SHAPE AND SIZE QUESTION.

Under the caption "Some Mistaken Notions," Mr. C. F. Townsend gives a very lively article in the December, 1910, issue of the Successful Poultry Journal. The greater part of his contribution is devoted to a refutation or confutation of the dictum, "Shape and size are derived from the dam or female in all races of animals." His experiments, so far as they prove anything, prove that the male gives the shape and the female the size. And this, too, is a saying long ago enunciated and held firmly by many excellent breeders. It is presumed that both maxims are of equal antiquity, but as between the two, if I had to make such a limited choice, I should pin my faith to the second.

But breeding can never be reduced to a few maxims. When they are the crystallization from many carefully verified experiments, they serve the useful purpose of presenting a truth in a convenient form for remembrance. But while they may contain a truth, it does not necessarily follow that they contain the truth. "Like produces like," is an excellent maxim, and based upon extended observations, it may be said to be true, and so it is in a general sort of way. Dogs produce dogs, and cats produce cats. But when one attempts to use this maxim as a sufficient guide in breeding, when he says that the young will be identical in appearance with their immediate parents, he will not be long in arriving at the conclusion that "Like produces like," with many differences or unlikenesses. And this will be so even with the maxim, "The sire gives the shape, the dam the size," even though Mr Townsend's experiments lend it some support.

When we realize that a fowl is only one of many possible presentations, that it is a composite creature bearing dormant and servient characteristics, and that when two such creatures are mated together and there is a mingling of all these characteristics in the germ plasm, to use a convenient term borrowed from Weissmann, we will readily understand the difficulty of predicting the exact characteristics of the progeny, and the impossibility of any maxim being a competent guide to the results which may follow. In breeding we may expect (1) a mingling of the characteristics of sire and dam; (2) the reproduction of characteristics of some more or less ancient ancestor; (3) the appearance of the characteristics of one of the parents to the total or large exclusion of those of the other parent; (4) a wholly new combination of characteristics. In other words, we have a right to expect that like will produce like in some cases, that atavism will show in others, that prepotency will upset our calculations, and that the elements which make a living creature may be so combined that the most astonishing variation, amounting almost to a new creation, may appear. In view of all these things, we must appreciate that we can not become successful breeders simply by learning a few maxims and blindly following their teachings.

Mr. Townsend's article, detailing his experiments, if carefully read, as it should be, will do excellent service in reminding us of the limitation of maxims in the art of breeding. And it is especially timely in presenting these facts just as many are preparing to mate up their breeding pens for another season's work. Every art is founded upon a science, the latter teaching us to know, the former to do. A good breeder needs to understand both the science and the art in order to proceed intelligently with his work. And certainly he needs to know that even the most trustworthy maxims are at the best but an expression of only one phase of truth. Truth may be compared to a ray of light consisting of many differently colored strands, or to a solid figure like a cube with its six faces. A maxim may be true and present one of the colored strands, but it is not the white light; or it may disclose one of the faces of the cube, but it does not show the whole solid.

SPROUTED OATS--WINTER EGGS

Sprouted Oats is conceded the greatest egg food known. Experiment stations and winter egg producers recommend it. The trouble always has been to have the grain easily and quickly sprouted. This is now perfectly accomplished, winter or summer, by the

DOUBLE QUICK GRAIN SPROUTER

Sprouted in 24 hours and four to five inches high in four to five days. A nice piece of furniture and may be used in the kitchen; cellar, hen house, feed house or any shelter. Makes two to three bushels of feed from one of grain. The cheap feed secret often advertised for $1.00 will quickly pay for itself in the increased egg yield and the feed it grows. Five minutes time or less each day. The most useful invention in years for the poultryman. Sizes from 50 to 500 hens.

Column of Thoughts

Hold up your head and look the world in the eyes. A hanging head and a shifty glance speak of self-distrust, and the world has no confidence in the one who doubts himself.

This world is rough, but never mind,
Keep singing as you go,
For if you stop to kick, you'll find
You've simply stubbed your toe.

Look forward cheerfully to the responsibilities ahead of you. Face the future with a smile. A happy, confident heart cannot carry a load heavy enough to crush it.

Don't let it scare you when people criticise what you do. Nine times out of ten they are mad because you did it before they thought of it.

Do you ever realize that when you are going away on a trip you talk so much about it that people are glad to see you go, and when you come back you talk so much about it they wish you hadn't gone?

Experience is a school at which we pay double tuition and forget the lessons.

Do not notice the faults of your friends. Before long you will be looking so hard for faults that you will fail to find your friends.

Don't sit around and say you wish you had some of the successful man's luck. He didn't waste time wishing for luck; he went after it.

A rumor is simply a lie that can't be headed off, half the time.

The minute you begin to think how old you are, you begin to look a little bit older.

So many men insist that it is bad luck when the trouble with them is plain laziness.

When a man is forty he learns that the knowledge he thought was useless when he was twenty, was just what he needed then.

If you were to tell the truth as you see it for one day you would not be out of the hospital for a month.

If you want to size yourself up, sit down some day and try to decide who would let you live with them if you lost your home.

Do not censure children for repeating what they hear the elders say. Elders should not say things they do not want told.

Hens that Lay Golden Eggs
Whether you're already in the poultry-raising business or not, expert knowledge of the business is absolutely essential to greatest success. You cannot get this money-making knowledge from a book. It must be imparted to you by experts who have devoted their lives to poultry-raising, and made a success of it.
You get this very individual instruction in the Poultry Raising Course of the International Correspondence Schools—a course which represents the life work of the world's most famous and most successful poultry raisers in the world—a course which marks the difference between failure and the greatest money-making success.
Every phase is completely covered:
How to select most profitable breeds; feeding; marketing eggs and poultry for profit; natural and artificial brooding; natural and artificial incubation; laying hens; combination plant; poultry appliances; enemies of poultry; poultry houses and management; turkeys; water fowls, squabs, etc.
Still further value is added to this Course through the association of the I. C. S. with the largest and most successful poultry farm in the world—Rancocas Poultry Farms—where experiments of every kind are made for the benefit of those taking this course.
The I. C. S. Course pays for itself many many times in the great saving of time and money. The season is here. Now is the time to begin. For full particulars, write now to

GETTING WINTER EGGS

The greatest profit from hens is in making yours lay when the other fellow's don't—an easy thing to do when each morning's feed contains a small portion of Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a. This tonic preparation also cures gapes, cholera, roup, indigestion, etc.

DR. HESS Poultry PAN-A-CE-A

is a wonderful assistant to hen nature. By its use, functions and organs which in confinement become dormant or inactive are compelled in an easy and natural manner to act as nature intended. This is why Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a fills the egg basket in winter. It is the prescription of Dr. Hess (M. D., D. V. S.), and is endorsed by leading poultry associations in United States and Canada. It costs but a penny a day for 30 fowls, and is sold on a written guarantee.

1 1-2 lbs. 25c., mail or express 40c.
5 lbs. 60c.
12 lbs. $1.25.

Instant Louse Killer Kills Lice

The father of Judge W. H. Wadhams had a chicken coop and a dog and a stable hand. It began to look to Mr. Wadhams as though some one had discovered the combination. So he kept the coop and the stable hand, but he got a new dog. Next day the bent old negro who groomed the Wadhams' horses came to him.

"You los' you affection foh me, boss?" he asked.

"No, Scipio," said Mr. Wadhams. "I like you as well as ever."

"Then," asked Scipio peevishly, "w'yn't you tie old Rover in de chicken coop stid of dat new dorg?"

Boy—Mother wants you to send her a nice young chicken.

Grocer—Do you want a pullet.

Boy—No. I want to carry it.

Old Hen—I will tell your mother how impertinent you are.

Young Cockerel—Tell on—I don't care. My mother was an incubator.

"Bring me two brown-shelled, fresh-laid eggs, fried on one side," ordered the customer. "Yes, sir; but on which side will you have them fried?" asked the waiter. "On the right side, of course," was the instant reply.

The little girl from the city, who heard her grandmother say that the hens were not laying very well, suggested that perhaps they were tired of laying and so took to standing around to rest themselves.

Two men were in jail, the one for stealing a watch, the other for stealing fowls. "Hullo," said the latter to the former, "what time is it?" To which the former replied, "It is about cock-crow."

Buff Rock: "I had a wonderful dream last night.'

Barred Rock: "Tell me about it."

Buff Rock: "I dreamed that I attended a great sale of fowls of all varieties. Buyers were numerous and prices were high. And the fowls were magnificent."

Barred Rock: "Did you see any like me?'

Buff Rock: "I did. Just as I was leaving the building I saw a whole lot like you, and they were marked fifteen cents for one or two for a quarter. But there were no buyers around them."

And he dodged a rock.

In a rural community a poultryman had the local artist in oil paint him a sign, which read: "A. Bloomfield, Pratical Poultryman." Of two men, looking at it, one said: "I notice the painter has left out one letter in Bloomfield's sign." "Yes, I had noticed it, too," said the other, "the letter 'i' after the 'P' in 'Pratical.'" A fortunate omission, that.

A NEW BROODER.

A new brooder has been put on the market by M. Franke, Box 60, Jeffersonville, Ind., and readers of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL should investigate it. It has several new features which have been thoroughly tested by the manufacturer and other poultrymen in practical work in the poultry yard, and all who have used it are enthusiastic in their praises of it. It is called the Light Brooder because of the special feature of there being no dark parts in it. Note the ad in this issue of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL and send for circular describing it.

A MATTER OF INTEREST TO ALL SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL READERS.

The complete catalogue and poultryman's guide issued for free distribution this year by the Cyphers Incubator Co. is just as interesting and high grade as are the incubators and poultry supplies put on the market by that company, and we don't know how to recommend the book in stronger terms. We can't do justice to it in a written description, even though we filled several columns. The slogan of the Cyphers Incubator Co. from start to finish is "quality." That is the foundation of their success and has enabled them to build up the biggest business of any kind that is in any way allied to the poultry industry. Let the reader stop a moment and think what that means. Doesn't it appeal to you as worthy your investigation if you are trying to succeed in breeding poultry and if you want the best incubators, brooders, poultry foods and appliances of whatsoever description that will help you in your work? Absolutely no expense or effort is spared by the Cyphers Co. in making all of their products the best that skill can produce and a most notable feature in connection with this fact is that the prices charged for Cyphers appliances, foods, etc., are no higher than are often charged for inferior articles. In these days of fierce competition, when so many firms are claiming the earth, it is a difficult matter for many people to separate the grain from the chaff when perusing ads, catalogues, etc., but there should be no question in the mind of any poultry raiser who will honestly and in a businesslike way consider the claims of the Cyphers Incubator Co. Mr. Grant M. Curtis, who for 20 years has been a deep student of all poultry problems, and who is perhaps the best known and most aggressive man in the poultry world today, is and has been the head of the Cyphers Incubator Co. for years and he personally stands back of every claim made by his company. The big free book above referred to contains more than 200 pages, 7½ by 10 inches, and has hundreds of illustrations in it. Any SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL reader can get a copy of it by simply addressing a request to Cyphers Incubator Co., Dept. 27, Buffalo, N. Y.

X-RAY INCUBATORS IN BIG DEMAND.

Our readers have no doubt noticed with interest the advertisements of the X-Ray Incubator Co., of Wayne, Neb. This advertising has caused considerable comment among our subscribers because the X-Ray incubator is so different from others.

Thinking perhaps you might be interested in knowing more about these people, we merely wish to say that last year they doubled their business and found their factory far too small to meet the demand for X-Ray incubators. This year, however, they have built a big modern factory—have doubled their capacity again—and reports from them indicate that they will be kept running at top speed in order to meet the sales promptly. Mr. J. H. Kate, president of the company, has written an interesting catalogue which he will be glad to mail to any of our readers. Address him personally in care of X-Ray Incubator Co., Wayne, Neb., and ask for his free book No. 17.

THE MILLION EGG FARM.

Suggests something big, doesn't it? Means something big, too. It means, for instance, an egg farm covering 241 acres, housing over 18,000 laying hens, and yielding profits astonishing to those not familiar with the Million Egg Farm system for handling chickens.

The Million Egg Farm is chiefly in the egg business because eggs mean profits. The egg machine on the farm is the famous "Rancocas" strain of Single Comb White Leghorns. She's the best egg machine ever developed, producing a large, white, even-textured eggs and lots of it. The whole story of how the "Rancocas" strain was developed could not be told in an article of this length. It is clearly and entertainingly told in Joel M. Foster's popular Million Egg Farm Book. Mr. Foster founded the Rancocas Poultry Farm—the Million Egg arm—at Brown's Mills-in-the-Pines, N. J., and has made it the wonder of the poultry world. In the Million Egg Farm Book he tells in a plain, understandable, breezy and refreshing way all his experiences—all the trials and mistakes and victories that led to the ultimate triumph. The Million Egg Farm Book has been declared by competent critics the best textbook obtainable on modern and successful poultry farming.

The Million Egg Farm Book closes with a discussion of the profits made on the Rancocas Farm during the year ending July 31, 1910, and an explanation of how "Rancocas" methods may be applied at any poultry farm regardless of whether the capital invested be $500 or $50,000.

A neatly-bound, paper-covered copy of the book is given with each four years' subscription to the Farm Journal. Those already subscribers can obtain a copy of the book by extending their subscription for four years. Send $1 to Farm Journal, 180 Clifton St., Philadelphia, Pa.

DON'T DECIDE TILL YOU HEAR WICKSTRUM.

P. W. Wickstrum is the man who has made the Queen Incubator famous and because of its leadership in the incubator field you cannot afford to buy an incubator till you get the free Queen book and see what Mr. Wickstrum has to say about his machines and what he guarantees to his patrons. If you are going to buy an incubator you want one that can be depended upon and one that has given satisfaction in the hands of the thousands of people who have tested. This is what you get when you buy the Queen, and for your own interests alone you ought to have a copy of the free book. It illustrates and describes these machines in detail and contains numerous pictures as well as much information that will prove interesting and helpful to every poultryman. Write to P. W. THE BUCKEYE NOT A CHEAP INCUBATOR.

The term "cheap" might be applied in two ways to any manufactured article. It can be cheap in either price or quality, or both. There are quite a number of incubators on the market to which this term could be applied in both ways and they are known among the trade as "cheap" machines. These machines are cheap in both quality and price. They are built of the cheapest materials and constructed in the cheapest manner, but the purchaser gets exactly what he pays for—a "cheap" machine. It is from this class of incubators that we wish to separate "Buckeyes."

Buckeye incubators are cheap from one standpoint only, and that is price. A careful examination from the "quality" standpoint will show that they are equipped with every desirable device that is found on any incubator at any price. In addition to that they are built of the best material that the market affords and put together by master mechanics and not by boys.

In addition to the finished appearance of Buckeye incubators they are "finished" from another standpoint. They are guaranteed to hatch every hatchable egg or the purchaser gets his money back any time within forty days.

There are over 150,000 Buckeye incubators in successful operation. Every "Buckeye" user received this guarantee with his incubator and you can rest assured that it "made good" or he wouldn't have kept it.

The point we are driving at is just this: We want SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL readers to know that even though Buckeye 50-egg incubators are sold for six, seven and eight dollars, they are a high-class product in every particular, or they would not be handled and sold by high-class seed and poultry supply houses all over the United States.

THE RELIABLE INCUBATOR MORE POPULAR THAN EVER.

One of the oldest and largest incubator factories in the country is the Reliable Incubator and Brooder Co., at Quincy, Ill. This concern occupies a floor space of 118,400 square feet—a building two stories high and covering a ground space of 370x160 feet.

Every poultry raiser everywhere knows the "Reliable" Incubator—either by his own experience or by reputation. It is a fact that Mr. J. W. Myers, the president of the Reliable Co., was the first to engage in the manufacture of incubators.

The terms of sale of "Reliable" Incubators and Brooders are always the same —"Money back if you are not in every way satisfied." And to guard against any machine not working to perfection, the Reliable Co. first tests every part of every incubator or brooder before it is shipped to a customer. Our readers should secure a copy of the "Reliable" free book, which may be obtained by addressing Reliable Incubator & Brooder Co., Box A-234, Quincy, Ill.

EASY TO MAKE YOUR OWN INCUBATOR.

When as many as 80,000 poultry raisers say that it is an interesting, instructive and enjoyable experience to build money-making incubators for themselves, there must be something in it. The majority say it isn't a bit of work, but lots of fun, and so it is. It's fun because it's interesting.

With approved practical plans, and well-made parts placed within easy reach, it is the easiest thing in the world to build an incubator that will bring definite results in successful hatches.

The man who has placed these practical plans within reach of poultrymen is H. M. Sheer of Quincy, Ill. Mr. Sheer has at an enormous expense written a book of plans which he gives away absolutely free.

This book fully explains how any man or boy can build an incubator or brooder at a saving of anywhere from a half to three-fourths the cost of a ready-made machine.

The plans show how to do the work from start to finish and each step is illustrated by photographs. This guards against mistakes and makes it possible to build a machine in a surprisingly short time.

But this is not all the free book does. It describes in detail the how and why of the finest and most practical incubator parts in the world. Mr. Sheer manufautures tanks, lamps, thermostats, regulators, egg turning trays and every other detail of incubator and brooder equipment. This practical equipment is also supplying the great demand of owners of other makes of incubators. Many who have drifted along with inferior fixtures and parts are not doing it now.

The lamps, regulators, burners, tanks, heaters and other appliances which the Sheer Company manufacture are adaptable to all makes of incubators and brooders. Thousands of poultrymen who do not want to buy new incubators are making repairs and improving their old machines by using Sheer's appliances. The best thing that can be said of Mr. Sheer's service to poultrymen is that he does not sell the book of plans for making incubators and brooders. It is worth a great many dollars to any poultryman, yet he may secure it absolutely without cost. Write for a copy to H. M. Sheer Co., Dept. 14, Quincy, Ill.

A NOTABLE PURCHASE OF REDS.

Messrs. Irving A. and Frank Churchill Sibley, of South Bend, Ind., have purchased from Mr. C. M. Bryant of Wollaston, Mass., the four grand Rose Comb Rhode Island Red hens which Mr. Bryant bought from Mr. Robt. C. Tuttle last year, at the longest price which was probably ever paid for four Rose Comb Rhode Island Red hens, together with two pullets from these hens.

Mr. Bryant says that these are unquestionably the best bred, as well as the best individual representatives of the old "Macomber" hen, whose blood contributed so largely to the high class of birds which were formerly in the yards of the late Robt. C. Tuttle, of Hartford, Connecticut.

In addition to the above, the Messrs. Sibley have recently purchased from Chas. W. Lord of Hazleton, Pa., formerly superintendent of Ellenwood Poultry Farms, eleven of his best hens. Mr. Lord, in writing of these birds, says that they are the cream of his flock, and the result of his best efforts during the past seven years as a breeder of Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds.

As the birds from Mr. Lord trace their ancestry directly back to the Tuttle and Bryant yards, they are bred along the same lines as the birds already in the possession of the Sibleys. These two lots of birds, together with the ones which were already in their own yards, place them in position to offer their customers eggs from the choicest matings for the season of 1911, and give them practically the finest line of Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds in the world, their yards now containing beyond doubt more of the strong lines of the old "Macomber" hen than all other yards in America.

We predict that they will be flooded with orders for eggs, and wish to advise those of our readers who wish to avail themselves of this opportunity to get their orders in early for eggs. Write for prices and mating list to Irving A. and Frank Churchill Sibley, Box B-1032, Jefferson Bvd., South Bend, Ind.

Guaranteed—A Chick From Every Fertile Egg

We know what the Buckeye 50-egg Incubator has done—we know what it can do. We've been making it and watching it work for 21 years. We sell each one under this absolute guarantee—It will hatch every hatchable egg or it won't cost you a single cent. Get a Buckeye from your dealer. Give it a forty day trial. If at the end of that time you are not satisfied with it in every respect, take it back and get your money at once.

BUCKEYE 50-EGG INCUBATOR

$6, $7 and $8

When you buy a Buckeye you get a complete and thoroughly equipped incubator ready to put into operation. It contains every necessary device found in the highest priced machines. No previous experience is necessary. Merely following the simple, printed instructions has brought big money success to many who never saw an incubator before. You see, in building the Buckeye, we have cut out all the difficulties. You need give no worry to the regulation of moisture or ventilation—the machine looks after all these details itself. Once the heat regulator is set, it need not be touched again during the hatch. We believe the Buckeye 50-egg Incubator is exactly the machine you have been looking for. We would like to have you examine one thoroughly. If your dealer doesn't keep them write to us and we will see that you get the opportunity to look over one at once. Let us send you our catalogue and our two special books, "Making Money the Buckeye Way," and "51 Chicks from 50 Eggs." We know they will interest you. They are free—write to-day.

FREE TO EVERY READER OF SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL.

We have just finished reading a very interesting book on poultry entitled "Chicken Chat," written by Mr. A. H. Zenner, 203 Lafayette Ave., Detroit, Mich. Every person interested in the profitable raising of poultry should own a copy of this book and we have arranged with Mr. Zenner to supply it free to every reader of this paper. All you have to do to get it is to send your name to him on a postal and he will forward it free of charge.

Among the various topics described in "Chicken Chat" are Lice, Mites and the various germs that are responsible for Roup, Pip, Tape Worm, Canker, Typhoid, Black Head and other infectious and contagious diseases which destroy all chances of profit in poultry raising.

"Chicken Chat" shows you how you can cure and prevent the spread of these diseases and how you can effectively disinfect your poultry house as the surest and safest means of making the industry more profitable. It is filled with hints on successful raising of chicks by means of the incubator and complete report contained therein of the Ontario Government Poultry Expert, Prof. Graham, showing a series of scientific tests will prove to be of special value. It shows you how you can secure more chicks than in any other known method. The book is free for the asking. We advise you to write for it early before the supply is exhausted.

SIBLEY'S ROSE COMB RHODE ISLAND REDS.

At the Great Mid-West Poultry Show held at Chicago Dec. 8 to 14, the "Quality Show of North America," the Old Colony Yards (Irving A. and Frank C. Sibley) of South Bend, Ind., won first on cockerel in a class of 39; first, third and fifth on hens in a class of 21; third on pens in a class of 8; fifth on corks in a class of 22, and fifth on pullets in a class of 45, making two firsts and five other prizes at this show.

The Sibleys are as usual the largest prize-winners at this exhibition in their variety of birds, and we heartily recommend them to any of our readers who are looking for stock with which to improve their yards.

CHAS. A. CYPHERS BUILDS UP AN ENORMOUS BUSINESS ON HIS NEW BUFFALO INCUBATORS AND BROODERS.

Few men there are in the poultry business but know that wizard of artificial incubation, Chas. A. Cyphers. There is hardly a poultry plant in the United States but contains one or more incubators manufactured or designed by him. Charlie Cyphers has been designing and manufacturing good incubators more years than we remember. No man could be more wedded to his calling. After years of research, study and experimentation he wrote and published "Incubation and Its Natural Laws," a book that was a classic, and became a hand-book in many agricultural colleges the world over. Following this in the early nineties he put out an incubator which, on its merits, quickly became the standard hatcher. In 1903 he put out another line, which was installed in many of the largest hatcheries in the country, one hatchery alone, the Crystal Springs Poultry Company, at Oil City, Pa., running ninety-eight of his incubators. Now he is manufacturing the Buffalo, which is meeting with enormous sales.

Speaking of his experiences, Mr. Cyphers says:

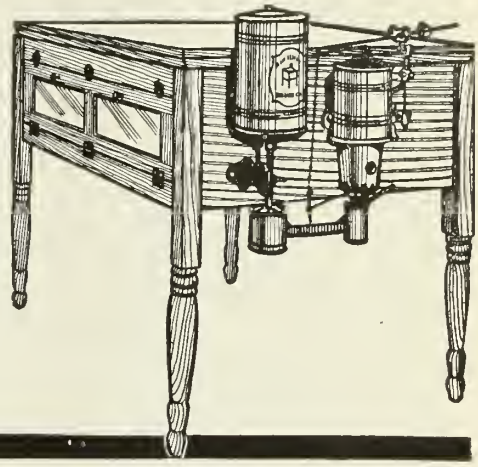
"My first incubator was simply a chemist's water-jacketed sand bath, heated by alcohol, with the temperature accurately controlled by a device of my own design. I shortly made other apparatuses of small dimensions, applying the heat and ventilation in many distinctive ways. In these apparatuses any shade of heat or ventilation could be maintained for any length of time. Eggs incubating under the hens were compared with those under different treatment in the experimental apparatus, and many wide variations were made to determine the causes of various phenomena that appeared.

"In making my former incubators my idea was to make the best irrespective of cost. Much labor and material went into their construction that had no direct bearing on their hatching qualities. In the Buffalo the construction is all that could be asked for in a practical incubator, while no principle is eliminated that makes a perfect hatcher.

"In the Buffalo brooders I have secured the acme of perfection. A well lighted and profusely ventilated brooder, heated with the minimum of oil consumption, and in a manner that they will maintain their temperature in zero weather. A perfectly regulated hover heat, a temperate nursery, accessible for cleaning, with the addition of a cold exercising compartment in the colony. This is a brooder the poultryman can pin his faith to, feeling confident that the results of the season's work will justify his efforts."

Those of our readers who contemplate purchasing new equipment this season will do well to write Chas. Cyphers, president of the Buffalo Incubator Co., 4708 Ellicot Square, Buffalo, N. Y.

You Can Build This Incubator Yourself And Save Money



Build Yourself A Money Making Incubator

WITH my plans and my parts you can build the best Incubator in the world. It's as simple as ABC. 80,000 poultry raisers have proven my way best. This great army of successful men and women have found in my plans the best way to get an incubator, and in my exclusive parts the appliances which overcome the imperfections and drawbacks in all other machines. I will gladly tell you about these. I will explain to you my Improved Acme Automatic Lamp—the safest and most economical money can buy. The oil is fed to the wick with my patented automatic air feed, and guarantees a uniform flame always. It seldom needs attention, is not flimsy and rickety. It will not get out of order. I will tell you why my Tandem Double Compound Thermostat has remarkable power, reliable positive action, and is the most sensitive made. By the very nature of its double wafer construction is twice as powerful and efficient as any other. Its use saves you 25% of your oil bills, cuts out all former regulation trouble, wipes out 50% of the ordinary operating expense. And so it is with all my parts. Everyone of them are exclusive and patented, all are money savers and money getters.

Special! To owners of other makes of Incubators—do not put up with inferior fixtures. My Lamps, Regulators, Burners, Tanks, Heaters, Thermostats and other appliances are adaptable to all makes of Incubators and Brooders. This is good news to thousands who do not want to purchase a brand new Incubator, and yet who realize they can get better results from Sheer's appliances. When making repairs, use Sheer's Lamps, Regulators etc., and note the great improvement effected. I will supply you with any appliances you need.

LEE'S INCUBATOR DISCOVERY.

Our readers are doubtless familiar with the great new feature of incubator ventilation introduced to the world this season by the Geo. H. Lee Company in their "Mandy Lee" incubator. The incubator door with the openings right into the egg chamber, as shown in most of the Lee incubator advertisements, is worth looking at. Mr. Lee applies the open-front poultry-house plan to incubation. His claim is that ventilation in his famous Mandy Lee incubator is now perfect. The gases arising from the hatching eggs are never confined a single moment. They pass out of the hatching chamber as fast as they are generated and the life-giving oxygen passes in. It is undoubtedly one of the most important discoveries ever made in artificial incubation. Long, thorough tests prove that it is right in principle. The improved "Mandy Lee" is making a great record as a hatcher not only of many but of strong, vigorous chicks.

Perfect ventilation is just one great feature of the Mandy Lee incubator. There are others not less important. Our readers, and particularly beginners with poultry, will appreciate its certainty. It is known as the incubator that is run by rule, without any guesswork about it. Not only the heat is measured, but the moisture.

The operator has only to follow instructions. If he does this he cannot go wrong. This makes the Mandy Lee in fact the incubator for all climates, all conditions and all operators.

There is much good, practical, right-to-the-point reading in the Lee books. His 1911 catalogue is one of them. "Lee's Chicken Talk" and "Mandy's Poultry School" are others. They are free and worth sending for. Look up the Lee advertisement and write for them, kindly mentioning this paper.

A LESSON IN POULTRY CULTURE.

It's a strange thing that so many people try poultry culture and fail at it. And yet—come to think of it—it isn't so strange a thing after all.

Poultry culture is an easy business to succeed in; and an easy business to fail in.

Success depends on knowing a few things about the business—chief among which is how to feed. And failure is largely brought about through ignorance of this very vital knowledge.

If every man or woman, the country over, who possesses one hen or a flock, would go to his or her dealer and ask for Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a, take it home and give a trifle of it to the hens every day, as the directions indicate, there would be very little talk about "poultry failures," because Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a is the main factor in a system which teaches right feeding.

Remember one thing: your hens are, after all, only so many machines, and you, the owner, are running them for your profit, just as a cotton spinner, for instance, runs his spindles for his profit.

The cotton spindles, to produce results, require cotton, and your hens, to make eggs, require food. If the spinner forced his spindles beyond their capacity to handle cotton he'd soon ruin his output, and if you forced more food down your hens' throats than they could digest, you'd soon ruin your output.

In other words, feeding must wait on digestion. You can only give profitably what the hen can use.

Right here is where Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a steps in and does a kind turn for the hen man.

The cotton spinner can never coax his spindles to handle more cotton, but the hen man can coax his hens to utilize more food.

It's as easy as A B C. A very little of Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a added to the morning's hot mash, will, in a few days, so strengthen the digestive organs of your hens that they can and will take a largely increased amount of food—and pay for it in prime eggs.

This isn't unreasonable, nor in any sense extraordinary. It's only a well known medical truth applied to poultry culture—that's all.

The hen can turn into eggs or flesh as much as she can assimilate and she can assimilate as much as she can digest. If you strengthen digestion, then, you have provided a direct channel through which more food can pass to the ovaries—with resultant accomplishment in the egg basket. Besides this, Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a prevents common poultry ills and hastens early maturity in young chicks.

It's a paying proposition any way you look at it, and poultry men are finding it out.

If you, reader, are dissatisfied with your present success in poultry culture, give Pan-a-ce-a a trial. It is guaranteed and the experience of thousands proves its value. Money back if not satisfied.

THE RIGHT KIND OF FENCING.

Put a real fence around your poultry yard. It does not cost a great deal more at the start and the little difference is paid for a dozen times over by the longer service and the better appearance. The Brown Fence & Wire Co., Cleevland, Ohio, make a specialty of real poultry fences, making a fence strong enough to serve as a general farm fence and yet light enough and close woven enough for a poultry fence. It is made from a special grade of wire—as elastic as steel and as durable as old-fashioned iron—and is given extra heavy, double galvanizing, which makes it impervious to rust and adds 50 per cent to its life and wear. It is so well made that top and bottom boards are not required and it can be put up with fewer posts than can the ordinary "cheap" poultry fence—so that while it is extra heavy and more durable, it really costs less, rod for rod. Mr. Brown has written a most valuable book on the fence question, showing why so many modern fences go to pieces so quickly and give such poor service. He tells some trade secrets about wire and about galvanizing that every fence buyer should know. Send for the book if you are thinking of buying fence of any kind. It will pay you. Address Dept. 65, The Brown Fence and Wire Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

$28 Starts You in the Poultry Business

It Buys a Complete Essex-Model Poultry Outfit Ready for Use

Here and now is your opportunity to get the most down-to-date poultry outfit cheaper than you could make it—and better. This outfit was specially selected by Mr. Robert H. Essex, the well known manufacturer and poultry expert. He says, "It includes everything but the hens, or the eggs."

This is What We Offer You

"Year Round" Colony House (The Latest and Best)	$12.00
Middle Price Essex-Model Incubator, 60 egg size	9.00
Essex-Model Portable Brooder Hover, capacity 150 chicks	7.00
Total, including all accessories	$28.00

This outfit is not to be confused with makeshift houses and incubators made to be sold for next to nothing. It is made by the Robert Essex Incubator Company, and is the famous Essex-Model quality. Such values cannot be duplicated elsewhere. We are sole manufacturers.

The Colony House embodies the most approved ideas in poultry house construction. It can be made into an open front house, so popular nowadays, or by closing the door and lowering the canvas screen, the hens are protected from excessive cold while ventilation without draughts is provided. This has been called the "Health-giving" Colony House by those using it.

The Incubator is the well-known Essex-Model Middle Price Machine. There is nothing better except the "Standard" Essex-Model which we also manufacture. Even if you have had no incubator experience, you can succeed with this Essex-Model. This machine is provided with thermostat, lamp, thermometer, and egg tester.

The Hover is equipped with thermometer, lamp and heater. It is all ready for use, and bears the Essex-Model guarantee, "Your money back if the goods are not satisfactory."

If you want larger sizes or other styles, we can supply you; and we will be glad to quote you on any size outfit, either "Standard" or Middle Price. We manufacture "Everything for Poultry Keepers."

If you want more information send for Outfit Catalog "C." It is Free, but you will find it gives you the facts you want to know.

FENCE TOWN FANCIERS' CLUB, ADRIAN, MICH.

This well-known organization, the first one in Michigan to join the A. P. A., will hold its fourth annual show Jan. 18 to 23, 1911.

We are now able to positively state that the coming show will be better financed, more liberal in its premiums and better managed than any of its previous efforts.

This year we propose to offer many grand cash prizes with the privilege of silver cups instead, winner's choice.

For our judge we have secured the well-known expert, J. W. Mulinix.

Those in charge of arrangements and exhibits are men whose experience peculiarly fits them for their positions and we expect results equal to last year with its record of no complaints, not a sick bird and general satisfaction of a job well done.

Again—this year—we provide a banquet for the exhibitors and hope that every exhibitor will be with us on that night.

Our specially designed ribbons have been of the best in the past and this year's will be even more satisfactory to the winners.

Cash prizes will be offered on all classes, and with the large entries always booked at this show make it in every way one well worth patronizing.

The premium list will be ready Dec. 15. If you expect to show anywhere Adrian should be on your list and in first place.

For any information address J. E. Holyoke, Secretary.

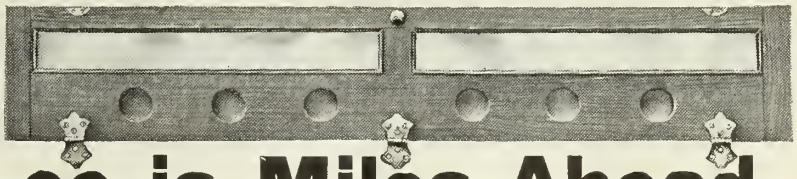
This open front door makes perfect ventilation



Mandy Lee is Miles Ahead

It is the only Incubator without a "Sealed," Air-tight Egg Chamber. It supplies the life-giving oxygen freely, draws off the carbonic acid gas, and is saving the lives of millions of chicks.

READ the story of the Mandy Lee triumph in our new catalog. Other incubators are already preparing to imitate and profit by our great discovery.

No guessing with a Mandy Lee

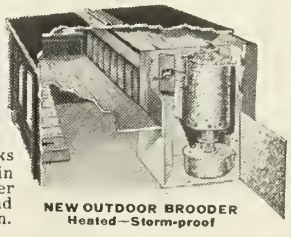
You cannot afford to buy an old-theory incubator which may go out of date and be discarded next year. You should know the truth now about the great discovery. The book is free. Ask for it.

There IS Something New in Incubators

We have taken the boldest and most important step ever taken in incubator building. See the openings into the egg chamber? They mean the saving of chicks' lives. It is the key to right hatching. Ventilation in the Mandy Lee is now perfect. It goes on all the time, neither above nor below, but right at the eggs. Every minute of the hatch the life-giving oxygen is freely passing in to the eggs and the carbonic-acid gas is passing out. And correct ventilation is just one of the great Mandy Lee features.

We Don't Guess—We Measure

The Mandy Lee is as far in advance of other incubators in heat and moisture as it is in ventilation. We do not guess at anything. The sensitive regulator controls heat to the fraction of a degree and we measure moisture just as accurately with the Mandy Lee Hygrometer (one sent with every incubator). You know what you are doing. You measure and control moisture; you control the hatch. The Mandy Lee is the all-season, all climate, all condition hatcher, always producing the most and the strongest chicks.



NEW OUTDOOR BROODER
Heated—Storm-proof

Mandy Lee Brooders give direct contact heat to the backs of the chicks. That is real mothering, the most important thing in poultry. Hovers are raised and lowered as weather gets warmer or cooler—heated from end to end. Chicks do not pile up and smother. Write to-day for catalog and full information.

WENDELL INCUBATOR CO.- HOLLY, MICH.
SUCCESSORS TO AUTOMATIC HATCHING CO. ESTABLISHED 1895.

Our Incubators have hollow walls, air space in top and bottom, double doors, safety lamp, nothing to catch fire, chick tray, automatically regulated and ventilated. Our price is low, our goods are as good as any and better than many; we do not guarantee or advertise unreasonable things. Our Suspension Brooder stands above all in correct brooding principals. It broods the chicks like mother hen. We are the originator of a flannel to lay on a chick's back; our heat is above the chick, no steps to climb, impossible to pile up or crowd, can be used in doors or out, made of metal, four sizes. We make Non-Freezing Drinking Fountains and Poultry Supplies of all kinds.

Questions Answered

In this department each month questions will be answered that are asked by readers. When writing for information please give all details in full or an an intelligent answer cannot always be given. No portion of your letter will be published if the mere statement of the question will answer the purpose. As there are oftentimes good reasons why inquirers do not wish their identity known, we will not publish names, initials or location. Questions are answered by experts in the various branches of poultry raising. Adress all inquiries to Successful Poultry Journal, 355 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Question.—I have twenty Barred Plymouth Rock pullets, nine months old, in a pen 8-12, and every two or three weeks I find one with indigestion; have lost two and cannot understand what causes it. I feed a bran mash with cayenne pepper in it mornings, green food noon, and grain in the scratch pen at night. The straw in the scratch pen sometimes has quite a little barley in the heads. Would that be injurious to them? They have charcoal, grit and oyster shells in hoppers all the time. Please tell me the cause and what to do.

Answer.—You are probably feeding too much cayenne pepper. It should not be fed in the mash every day, even in small quantities. It will do no harm if fed occasionally as a tonic, but will produce bad effects in various ways if fed regularly. Try cutting it out altogether. Your general method of feeding cannot be criticised.

Question.—I would like your advice on the best breed of chickens for this section of the country (Ohio), and how should I begin? I intend starting in the poultry business, but will have to start on a small scale. Please advise me.

Answer.—One breed is just as good as another, but you will have greater success with a breed which you admire. Make your selection from the standpoint of what suits you best in shape and color. Visit a poultry show, if you can, and see the different breeds of fowls. Buy stock to start with, if you can afford to purchase good birds. If not, invest in a few high-grade eggs for hatching.

Question.—How long will it take a White Leghorn hen to lay out the germ after she has been once mated to a dark cock? Will dark feathers crop out in full-blooded white chicks if their mother was never mated to a dark cock?

Answer.—It is generally agreed that the fourth or fifth egg laid by a hen after being separated from the male bird will not be fertile, although there are exceptions to this rule. It can generally be depended upon that the fourth or fifth egg laid after the hen is mated with any certain male will be fertile by that male, and the effect of any previous mating will be destroyed. White breeds will show a little black on plumage, sometimes even in the best line bred flocks, but only in extreme rare cases would a solid black feather be found, and then only in the small feathers like those in the back and breast.

Question.—Please answer the question, "What is known as a sport as applied to pure bred fowls?"

Answer.—The term of "sport" is applied to a fowl which is altogether different in color from its parents, as, for instance, from a mating of Barred Rocks there will sometimes appear a pure white bird. This would be called a sport. There are cases where a solid black bird may also come from parents of various colors and in other ways, as above stated, fowls of this kind are some times produced.

Question.—This fall I built a poultry house 10x20 feet. I did not put a solid foundation under the house, merely set it on stone pillars, about six inches off the ground. Now in the house I have a wire netting partition in the center so as to accommodate two pens. In each half I have one window, double sash, six 9x14-inch glass in each sash; the top sash I let down about a foot and put a muslin curtain in the full width of the window, intending this should answer for ventilation. In front of the perches I put burlap curtains. During the day I keep the muslin curtains in the windows, raised so as to let in plenty of fresh air, and yet the house is damp. I lined the wall inside with one-ply roofing and this evening I noticed the walls were fairly wet. I do not see the reason. Would be very grateful to you for any suggestion you might give to overcome this trouble if it continues this way long. I am afraid I shall have sickness in the flock.

Answer.—If your poultry house is not located in a damp place you can, perhaps, remedy the trouble by providing more ventilation, as for instance taking out the glass windows, or one of them at least, and filling the entire opening with muslin. The only remedy is ventilation, and you could proide this in whatever way seemed most convenient. It is possible also that you have too many birds in the house, which would also cause dampness by reason of the warmth arising from them during the night, condensing when it strikes the cold atmosphere, and thereby forming frost and dampness on the walls.

Question.—I built a house last summer of matched lumber on concrete foundation 6 inches in the ground and 6 inches above with cement floor, on which is spread 3 to 4 inches of gravel and sand, followed by 6 inches of straw for litter. The roosts are in the back. The back, sides and roof are sheeted inside again with matched lumber to the extent of 12 inches past the roosts, giving it an absolutely air-tight roosting place. It also has a partition in the center, making 2 pens with dimensions 13½x10½ feet each, with Barred Rocks in one and White Wyandottes in the other.

There are two windows in front, below the hip, and one in each end 3'4"x2'10", also three in hip, 36x18 inches. It also has a 12-inch strip of muslin running the entire length of building above windows for ventilation. Would you advise me putting muslin also in the two windows in front, which faces south, or would you suggest closing those windows in winter, as I first intended, or do you think this is sufficient ventilation, with 12-inch strip only?

Do you think it would be practical to keep 30 fowls in each pen providing the floor space is not taken up with anything other than dust bath? They have grit, oyster shell and charcoal in hoppers, but do not seem to take to it, so I have begun feeding it to them each morning in their dry mash except the charcoal, which I only give every other day. They are large, vigorous, healthy pullets, April hatch.

Answer.—Your house seems to be a good one in every way. We would not make the window tight and unremovable, but would have muslin windows as suggested in your letter. We would use these muslin windows all the time except in the very coldest weather, and we would then remove them and put in glass windows. We do not believe that you would have success in trying to keep 30 fowls in each pen. Twenty would really be a large number and you would have better success in keeping only 15 in each pen. The amount of yard room which you have outside, of course, makes some difference, but on days when the fowls are confined almost entirely to the house or in case you have very little yard room outside you will find that 20 birds in each pen would be a large number.

THE BEST BOOK ON SUCCESS WITH POULTRY IS

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full.

RHODE ISLAND REDS

How to Breed and Judge Them

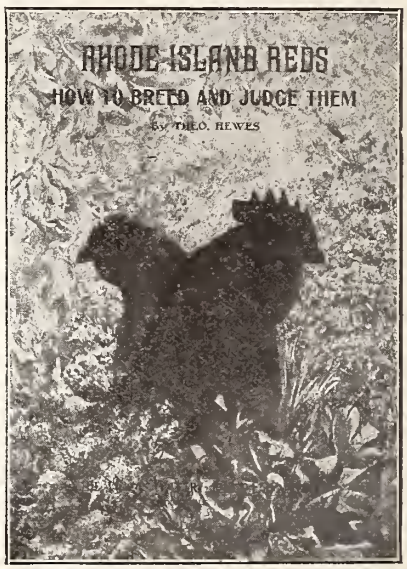
By THEO. HEWES

Is the Best and Only Complete Treatise Ever Published on this Great Variety

There is no breed so widely advertised to-day as the Rhode Island Reds and no breed in which there is such a wide difference of opinion as to what constitutes perfection.

RHODE ISLAND REDS; HOW TO BREED AND JUDGE THEM is better than the STANDARD OF PERFECTION

because it goes into detail and describes every section, with numerous illustrations, showing ideal and defective shape and color, thus making scoring so simple that anyone can understand. Some sections have four or five illustrations showing the several defects that may be found in them, with the proper discount for the same as applied by our leading judges.



Size of Book 11 1-2 by 8 1-2 in. Contains over 50 pages, including cover, which is printed in three colors, and all on good halftone paper. PRICE $1.00

In addition to this most complete series of articles on scoring, there are numerous articles from America's foremost Red breeders on every phase of Red breeding. This book tells you just what you want to know. It tells you how to mate your pens; how to grow your chicks; how to select your show birds; in fact, it tells you how to grow, exhibit and make money out of Reds.

This book is sold on approval. The price is $1.00, and, dear reader, if you are not satisfied with your bargain, send us back the book and we will refund your money.

REGAL WHITE WYANDOTTE BOOK

I have just received from the printers another edition of my book on White Wyandottes. It contains 52 pages and is without doubt the most complete book that has ever been published dealing wholly with the White Wyandotte. It is full of illustrations from life and its pages deal with a variety of subjects including chapters on Origin, Description, Feeding, Care of Breeding Stock, Fertility, Color Characteristics, Washing and Fitting for Exhibition, Poultry Diseases, etc.

My object in issuing this book is to bring to the attention of every White Wyandotte breeder the Regal Strain, America's finest White Wyandottes. The magnificent winnings of this strain at the leading shows have never been equalled. New York State Fair 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910—26 blue ribbins out of a possible 30. Would you like such a record? Then breed the Regal Strain. 1500 Regal Cocks, Hens, Cockerels and Pullets for sale 1500. Send one dime for the REGAL WHITE WYANDOTTE BOOK. The information it contains will be worth dollars to you.

IT SOLVES THE HARDEST PROBLEM

WHAT TO DO WITH THE EARLY HATCHED CHICKS—where to keep them and how to raise them successfully, has been the HARDEST PROBLEM that a large majority of poultry raisers have had to solve since the hatching of large numbers of early chicks was MADE PRACTICAL by the invention and manufacture of DEPENDABLE, GUARANTEED INCUBATORS of the popular sizes.

TAKE FEBRUARY AND MARCH, for example. During these two months, eggs are easy to get and good hatches can be made, but what is to be done with the chicks? It is not satisfactory to place newly-hatched chicks in outdoor brooders located in snow banks; yet ninety-nine out of a hundred users of incubators do not feel at liberty to build costly brooding houses heated by hot-water systems, etc. It is just here that comes into play—and completely solves the problem. This one-lamp, four-section, eight-compartment in-door brooding device (see illustration) is not new and untried! We are not offering you an "experiment." Here is sample evidence—here is proof of the highly satisfactory work this brooder is doing in the hands of pleased customers:—

Four-Section, One-Lamp PARADISE BROODER. Capacity 400 Chicks, in Eight Separate Lots of 50 Chicks Each

"Are Easy to Keep Sanitary"

MUNCIE, IND., October 18, 1910.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.:

The Paradise Brooders we purchased of you last spring gave excellent satisfaction and seem to embody every feature necessary for the perfect health of the chicks. There was no chilling or overheating or stifling fumes to threaten the lives of the chicks. In this brooder pure air is always available and they are easy to keep sanitary. Our experience with the Paradise Brooder warrants a large sale for them among poultry raisers.

W. W. TUTTLE.

"Loss Less Than Five Per Cent."

LAKEWOOD, N. J., December 21, 1910.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.:

Last March we purchased two of your Paradise Brooders and raised, or rather put in, 4,000 chicks during the spring and early summer, and raised to maturity 3,874 head of stock. You will note that our loss was less than five per cent., which we consider a remarkable record for ourselves and we cannot say too much in favor of the Paradise.

The construction of this brooder, giving so much light and fresh air, as well as a steady, even temperature, seems to enable the chicks to grow like weeds.

We also used your sealed-bag brand of Chick and Developing Food and partly attribute our success and the absence of bowel trouble among the chicks, to the use of these foods.

PLEASANT VIEW FARM,
COLLINS & CO., Proprietors.

During All Seasons of the Year

URBAN FARMS, BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1910.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.:

Agreeable to our promise made last year to report our further experience with the Paradise Brooder, I can say that we continued all last winter and spring and late into the summer, with less loss of chicks than by any other method of brooding—natural or artificial. We were so successful that we have installed another Paradise, and if we had the room for it we would purchase a third.

The chicks are taken from the incubators and placed directly into the Paradise Brooders. We now have Brooder No. 1 filled with 134 chicks which were put in October 11th. All are doing well. These will be kept in the brooder until they are practically grown to broiler size or eight to twelve weeks old—just as we did last season successfully and repeatedly.

The Paradise Brooder makes the raising of chicks the least of the troubles connected with poultry culture.

Our experience shows that a much larger percentage of chicks can be raised in this brooder than can be done by any other method. The chicks are constantly in plain view and therefore can be given the proper care.

Yours truly, GEO. URBAN, JR.

PLACES TO USE: THE PARADISE BROODER can be operated with success in a dwelling house, store room, stable, poultry building or other structure where the temperature does not go below freezing. It will give excellent satisfaction in any of these locations. No better or more convenient place can be found than near a window in a room in an ordinary dwelling—a south or east room preferred, where the sun will shine in on bright days. Just the thing for poultrymen dealing in day-old chicks who need comfortable and safe quarters in which to keep newly hatched chicks a few hours or a few days until they are shipped away on orders. It is equally valuable for all persons who buy day-old chicks. FOR DETAILED ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTION of the Paradise Indoor Brooder (heated by coal oil stove or by gas) write today for our Complete 1911 Catalogue and Poultryman's Guide, 212 pages; fully describes our more than 100 standard poultry articles for progressive, successful poultry raisers. "Keep chickens," and live better at less cost.

THOUSANDS of families, in city and country, have found this the easy way to IMPROVE their standard of living, and at the same time LOWER THE COST. With chickens you always have delicious food, for the family or for "company." Their eggs supply you with ready money or ready food. They are pets that pay their board. By keeping chickens, boys and girls can earn money, and also get an excellent training. Sometimes the back-yard plant grows into a large business, like those of CURTISS, and FOSTER, who make many thousands of dollars a year.

Raising chickens pays if you know how, whether you keep a dozen hens, or run a large poultry-farm; but you need the best guides. Many get from their chickens less than HALF as much as they might get with the guidance of any of these three splendid modern poultry-books, which tell the experience and methods of the most successful modern poultry-raisers.

These methods have all been tested by actual experience and proved successful. The FARM JOURNAL stands back of them, for it has investigated them and KNOWS. They can be used with six hens or six thousand. Many are using these methods with splendid success and profit.

The Million Egg Farm is the great guide-book for back-yard chicken-raisers. It tells how J. M. Foster is running an egg farm in the heart of the New Jersey pine belt that brought his concern a profit of a little more than $19,000 last year. This was made from sales of commercial eggs, some stock, and day-old chicks. Foster has nearly 20,000 laying hens now, and will market this year between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 eggs.

Anyone who "raises eggs," either for market or the home table, should of course know all about the system used in this huge business. "THE MILLION EGG FARM" gives the whole story: How the stock is raised, how the hens are fed, all about the "Rancocas Unit" (which is one of the most interesting features to owners of a few chickens), how Foster started and the mistakes he made, how novices should start, and what to avoid. A really wonderful story of success.

Curtiss Poultry Book tells how Roy Curtiss, a farmer's boy, starting with a few neglected hens, has built up at NIAGARA FARM one of the best-paying poultry plants in the world. Roy agreed that if his father would furnish the feed, he (Roy) would supply eggs and chickens for the farm table, and all left over were to belong to him. In two years Roy was using so much feed that his father had to cry quits, but the boy kept right on. His brother joined him, and the business grew and grew. But they had no guidance, and had to learn by their own mistakes. Such a guide as the Curtiss Poultry Book would have saved them thousands of dollars. This capital book was written right at Niagara Farm by the veteran poultryman, Michael K. Boyer. He says he never saw a general poultry plant so well managed. Every day shipments go off, every day money comes in. Their percentage of fertile eggs, of live, strong chickens hatched, of day-old chicks shipped without loss, is really wonderful. This book gives all their methods and feed formulas, tested and improved by years of experience. Many pictures. Whether you raise chickens, ducks, or eggs, have a dozen fowls or thousands, you will find in this book help that you can get in no other way.

"Poultry Secrets" is a remarkable collection of successful "wrinkles" in poultry-raising, secured and edited by MICHAEL K. BOYER (known to poultrymen as "Uncle Mike"). Many of these were treasured secrets of famous poultrymen, guarded with jealous care because of their great value. We paid hundreds of dollars for them. This is the ELEVENTH EDITION, and thousands are using these methods with great profit.

W. R. Curtiss tells his successful method of hatching 50 per cent. more pullets than cockerels; the Philo System is described and explained; the "15-cents-a-bushel" and "8-cents-a-bushel" green feed secrets; secrets of the Angell, Palmer, and Hogan Systems; Boyer's method of absolutely insuring fertility of eggs for hatching; Townsend's system for preventing death of chicks in the shell; Felch's famous mating chart, suppressed for many years; feeding and fattening secrets; and MANY OTHER PRICELESS SECRETS, are here disclosed for the first time.

ANY ONE of these books, and Farm Journal balance of 1911 and all of 1912,	ANY TWO of the books, and the Farm Journal for three years,	ALL THREE of the books, and Farm Journal for two years,
50 cents	$1.00	$1.00

Be sure to say plainly WHICH BOOK or books you want.

Farm Journal is the standard paper for everyone who grows or wants to grow fruit, vegetables, poultry, or stock of any kind. It is 33 years old, and has over 800,000 subscribers, in all parts of the country. "Judge Biggle" and "Peter Tumbledown" are characters far better known to many than Hamlet or Micawber. It has a fine poultry department, more valuable than most poultry papers. It is a favorite paper with housekeepers. Clean, clever, cheerful, amusing, intensely practical. Cut to fit everybody, young or old, village, suburbs, or rural routes. Unlike any other paper and always has been.

FARM JOURNAL, 180 Clifton Street, Philadelphia.

Ernest Kellerstrass Says

I Made $18,178.53 Net Profit In One Year Selling Chickens And Eggs

I took a flock of 1,638 chickens and made them net me a profit of $11.09 per bird in 12 months' time. My farm and books are open for inspection to any State Poultry Experimental Station. If your station doesn't find the above statements true, I'll donate $1,000 in cash to your institute.

My New Book Tells HOW I DID IT

In my new poultry book I tell how I made $3,600 in one season from 30 hens on a lot 24x40, by feeding the scraps from my table three times a day. I'll give you the names of those who paid me over $2,000 for the eggs alone from these fowls—you can refer to them.

I'll tell you how I make my chickens weigh 2½ pounds at 8 weeks of age.

I tell how I prepared my chickens for the show room, so that I won over 90 per cent of all the blue ribbons offered during 1907 and 1908. This has never been published before.

This book covers all branches—it tells everything necessary to success with poultry. It tells you what I have done—how I started.

I Tell You Everything That is Necessary to Success in the Poultry Business.

It also gives you my opinion and experience that I have had with advertising solicitors of poultry journals.

It also gives my opinion and experience that I have had with poultry judges in the show room, and why, in my opinion, the little fellow don't get what he thinks he ought to have in the show room. I tell it just as I have seen it and experienced it. There are several pages in this book taken from my records, and from my cash book and ledger. There are no secrets—I tell it all.

Try my way and you can raise them by the hundreds

Their Testimony Should Bear Weight

IT IS the beginner—the amateur—who should investigate very carefully before putting good money and good eggs into a poor incubator—into a cheaply built, made-to-sell, "bargain" affair. The experienced, successful poultryman knows better than to do this; he tried it out long ago and learned that the best "hatching machine" he can buy is the one it will pay him best to own and operate.

Do hard, solid facts "talk" with you, reader? Are you interested in evidence—in reliable, absolute proof of every claim we make for the superiority of Cyphers Incubators and Brooders?

We claim that the Cyphers is the logical incubator for the poultryman who has reached success; we also claim that it is the best incubator by long odds for the man or woman, or boy or girl, who is beginning in the work—and who plans to get out of poultry raising the most there is in it.

Following is some of the proof we present—proof from men of scientific training, from men who are interested solely in the advancement of the poultry industry, from men who would not think of publicly endorsing an inferior or worthless article. Read every line of this proof:

Iowa Agricultural College

Ames, Iowa, July 11, 1910.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Regarding the Cyphers Incubators which we are using at this station, it gives me pleasure to state that they have given us satisfactory results. We have been exceptionally pleased with the evenness of temperature and ease of operation. We can say the same of your outdoor brooder and adaptable hovers, which we have not only used with excellent results, but they have given exceptionally good results when handled by students, some of whom had never seen brooders before.

WM. A. LIPPINCOTT,
Assistant in Charge of Poultry.

New York College of Agriculture

Ithaca, N. Y., October 9, 1909.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Cyphers Incubators continue to stand high in our estimation and in the estimation of our students, who have a good opportunity to compare a large number of machines of widely different types. This opinion is based on a comparison of results in hatching, covering several years.

JAMES E. RICE, Professor of Poultry Husbandry.

Rhode Island College of Agriculture

Kingston, R. I., October 14, 1910.

Cyphers Incubatar Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

We have twenty (20) Cyphers Incubators for student work. Most of these machines have now been in use ten or twelve years, and some of them since our first poultry class, back in 1896. They are of the No. 0 size and are used for student practice. When we get a poor hatch from a Cyphers Incubator, it is usually the fault of the eggs.

D. J. LAMBERT, In Charge of Poultry Department.

Massachusetts Agricultural College

Amherst, Mass., June 18, 1907.

Cyphers Incubatar Ca., Buffala, N. Y.

The continued use of Cyphers Incubators confirms me in the favorable opinion I had formed concerning them. We find that your incubators give better hatches than any others we have ever tried. One point in particular I desire to call attention to: Your incubator is simple and easy to operate. Beginners have repeatedly secured excellent hatches with your machines. None of these students ever before had any experience in running an incubator.

WM. P. BROOKS, Professor of Agriculture.

Colorado Agricultural College

Fort Collins, Colo., September 27, 1910.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

We used the Cyphers the past season at our experiment station and shall continue to use them for student practice. The materials and workmanship of the Cyphers are certainly first-class. Your machines are well thought of in this section and I am glad to say a good word for them.

W. E. VAPLON, Poultryman.

Montana Agricultural College

Bozeman, Mont., Oct. 20, 1910.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffala, N. Y.

We have used your incubators for several years and have always found them reliable and look to them to do the best work of any we have installed at this station. At this high altitude we put moisture pans in the bottom of our nursery trays and the chicks come out strong and vigorous and we have very small death rates.

THE BOOK THAT EVERYBODY IS BUYING—

Secrets of Expert Exhibitors

And Easy Lessons in Judging—By Frank Heck

A book that is new in character and the most valuable and interesting production ever published for breeders of exhibition fowls. No other book or similar publication comes within gunshot of it. It is in a class by itself.

The time has gone by when a breeder can pick up birds right out of the yards and win with them without special preparation. This is true even in the smaller shows. There are always at least a few hustling, enterprising breeders in nearly every locality who are keenly alive to the financial profit and the honors accruing from winning over all competitors. These breeders use all legitimate methods for putting their birds in show condition.

FAKING AND LEGITIMATE PREPARATION—BOTH LAID BARE.

Faking is certainly wrong and it should not be practiced, but even in legitimate show preparation what chance have you to win over one or more honest competitors who may have a copy of this book and thereby possess the knowledge which enables them to fix up their birds in scores of ways that are not known to you. Consider also the immense advantage you would have in being able to detect such forms of faking as can be discovered in cases where there may possibly be a dishonest exhibitor in the class.

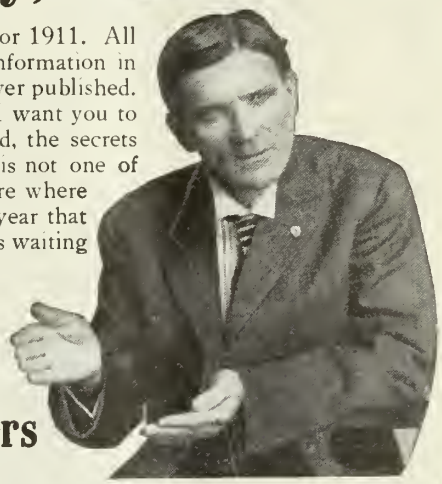
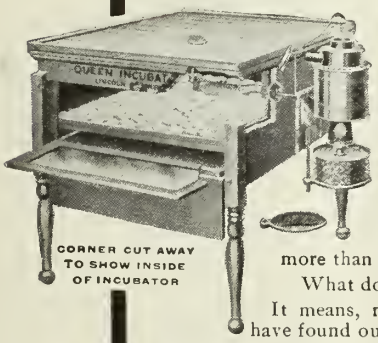
This Is the Year of Opportunity

Don't let your chance slip to make a stake out of poultry this year. The poultry business is a live business, a real business. This is the year, this is the time of year. Start now, in the right way, and make big money. P. M. WICKSTRUM.

If You are Terribly in Earnest About Poultry, Write Me

Here it is, friends, my Poultry Guide and Catalog for 1911. All ready for you and with more good, sound, practical information in it on the things you want to know than any other book ever published. I picture it big because it is big, but that's not the point. I want you to see the pictures, the questions answered, the problems solved, the secrets revealed, and the stories of genuine success inside of it. It is not one of the books you pay a dollar for. Mine is free, but I don't care where you send or what you pay, you will not get any book this year that will be so helpful to you. You are welcome to a copy. It is waiting for you. Let me have your name and address.





CORNER CUT AWAY TO SHOW INSIDE OF INCUBATOR

Queen Incubators and Brooders

I expect to put out 20,000 more Queen Incubators this year. The way business is coming now, I will sell even more than that.

What does that mean?

It means, my friends, that chicken raisers have found out that I treat them right.

It means they know I do not misrepresent my machines. That can't be said of everybody.

Means that the Queen Incubator way does make poultry pay. Makes poultry a real business.

And, last but not least, it means that no other high-grade incubator is sold on anything like such remarkably liberal terms as I make on the Queen.

Let's Get Together

Friends, poultry lovers, let us get together on this business. If you have never written me you don't really know how far I do go in starting people in poultry and helping them on to success.

Right here I want to make you my direct personal offer:

Let me send you a Queen on the make-good plan. No strings to the offer. I mean just that.

The Make-Good Plan

I will send you my famous, high-quality Queen Incubator, and pay the freight on it, for you to operate at your own home and see whether it makes good.

See whether you can make good with it.

Over 60,000 other Queen users started that way. Great friends of mine now, and all making money.

Read what one of these good friends just wrote: "We are using at the present time 21 of your machines. What price can you make on ten 360 and five 240 egg sizes?" (Signed) C. W. Norton, Pomona, Cal.

Hundreds of satisfied customers write me for more machines. Would they do it if the Queen was not making good? I am willing for you to be the judge.

Guaranteed 10 Years

I guarantee my Queen 10 years in your hands.

I always aim to give my customers the long end of it. It is the only way I have of convincing strangers that I am dealing honestly and sell honest machines.

I am just as proud of my Queen system of outdoor and indoor brooders as I am of my famous Queen Incubator.

Let me tell you personally about the Queen system of mothering and raising chicks.

Now, I want to stop talking in general and write to you personally. I think you will understand me and my ways of doing business better. May I have the chance? I do want you to read my fine new book. Don't wait. Write me for it now. Address

I'll Make You an Old Trusty at Factory Cost—Plus 70 Cents

Any other factory would charge you several dollars for their trouble, because they have to have that much profit on each machine—they make so few of them.

? Why Old Trusty Has Satisfied 300,000

FRIEND—Johnson wants to tell you a few words here about Old Trusty—how it is made on my experience of 35 years—so you'll see why it has satisfied over 300,000 customers:

"Old Trusty" is made of California Redwood—metal and asbestos encased—double walled and has a heating system absolutely superior to any other incubator because the heat is radiated evenly in all parts of the egg chamber. It has a double direct acting regulator, so reliable that "Old Trusty" could actually be run without using a thermometer, though equipped with best one made. Patent jacket enclosing boiler saves 15 to 50 per cent of the oil.

Some people seem to be afraid to tell how their incubators are made. Other manufacturers seem to think that the more complicated they make their machines appear, the more contraptions and do-funnies they get about them, the more easily they can sell them.

There has been so much tommy-rot written about the "theory of incubation," that I 'm sometimes inclined to let "Old Trusty" stand on its record—results are what you want and "Old Trusty" gives them. But "Old Trusty" is so simple that its easy to see why it gives such good results.

Hatching chicks is largely a matter of heat—the right temperature. That's all the old hen bothers about and that's the principle thing we have to consider. Ventilation and moisture are important, they are taken care of all right in "Old Trusty," but in temperature and regulation our patented copper-pipe heating system. and our double connected wafer direct regulator, positively excel any other incubator ever made. You can see for yourself if you examine "Old Trusty."

The water as it is heated in the heater, flows through a pipe to the far end of the incubator while it still retains all its heat. This pipe is relatively small as compared with the pipes around the outer edges of the egg chamber; it has only 1-3 the radiating surface, therefore does not overheat the center on the end of the egg chamber nearest the heater.

That's why there are no cold corners in "Old Trusty"—why an absolutely uniform temperature is maintained in every part of the egg chamber, and that's why "Old Trusty" makes such phenomenal hatches, and gives such universal satisfaction, and why I can offer to send the FAMOUS "Old Trusty" to any one, anywhere and guarantee 80 per cent hatches or better.

Do me one favor. Will you send me your name for my book this time?

Just that—and that's enough if you are interested to make big money raising poultry this year.

By* M. M. JOHNSON
(Himself)
Clay Center, Nebraska

MY actual factory cost is based on an output of 100,000 machines, mind you—that's more than any other five incubator manufacturers combined make in a season.

And that's the reason why I'm satisfied to make less than 70c on each machine as my profit.

I'd rather make 70c each on 100,000 machines than $7.00 each on 10,000. And then 10,000 machines is a bigger output than most factories have.

I'll charge you less than $10—guarantee Old Trusty for 10 years—prepay the freight to your station (east of the Rockies)—and send it all ready to hatch with—set up complete to use the day you get it.

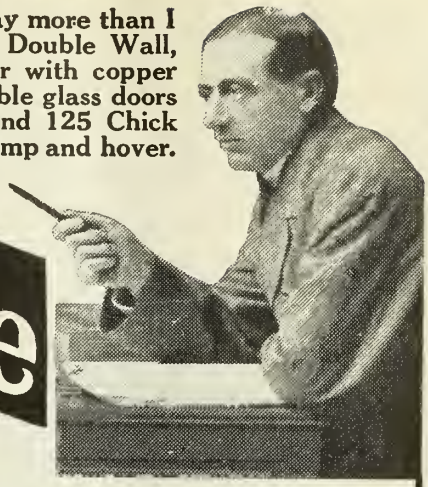
Why Pay More

It is simply throwing money away to pay more than I ask for my 125 Egg, Hot Water, Double Wall, California Redwood Incubator with copper tank and boiler, large double glass doors and roomy nursery and 125 Chick Brooder with Lamp and hover.



125 Egg Incubator 125 Chick Brooder

If you could see the Wisconsin side by side with others selling for $4.00 and $5.00 more, you would agree with me that to pay more than my price and get less value is the height of folly.

If Ordered Together Both for $10 Freight Paid East of the Rockies

You see I know what I am talking about, for I have bought and compared side by side others on the market. Over in the other columns I have pointed out these comparisons for your benefit exactly as they are and you can judge for yourself how much less you get for the extra money you pay.

That's why I ask "Why Pay More?"

Why My Sales Double Every Year

There is a lot of people who have learned the truth of my statements. They have saved those extra dollars and each year this number is increasing. Each year my sales are doubling and this enables me to improve my machines—give better value for the same money. I won't raise the price—though in comparison with others, I know they are easily worth $15.00. I want to give the biggest and best incubator and brooder bargain on the market and I am doing it. There is none on the market that approaches them even at ⅓ more cost and I'll prove it to you.

Natural Finish California Redwood

20,000 Machines in One Year

That's the high watermark and nothing but genuine merit can ever make it possible. Then to double it—certainly it requires the very best at the lowest cost to climb into public favor at such a rate. But that is what increases the sales of the Wisconsin Incubators and Brooders.

Every machine I sell through my advertising sells me an average of four more and each of those four sell an average of two, making an endless chain of sales—all because of the excellent results they give my customers and the bargain price I make of $10.00 for two machines, freight paid.

I Ship Them on 30 Days' Trial

You have ample time to test them out and if not completely satisfied you can send them back at my expense. Out of the thousands I ship every year if I told you how many ever come back I doubt if you would believe me.

Why I Can Sell Better Machines at One-Third Less Cost Than Others

I was the first to make and sell an incubator and brooder for $10.00, freight paid. It was two years before my imitators got busy. I had a good start on them and they are farther behind today than ever.

It takes experience (more so than money) to know how to produce a successful incubator and sell it at my price. That's why the imitations cost more and are of inferior value. You want the original—the best and one of longest proved reputation. Then don't be misled—get the Wisconsin. You take no chances, for

I Guarantee My Machines for Five Years

Just think of it. Does it not stand to reason that I must have machines of exceptional merit to put them out on 30 days trial—guarantee them five years and sell them for about $5.00 less than others charge for machines of less quality?

The Wisconsin incubator is hot water type, has double side walls with dead air space between; top has three walls; large double glass doors; copper tank and boiler; roomy nursery beneath egg tray; self-regulating; made of high grade California Redwood, stained and varnished so you can see quality of lumber (not painted to cover up cheap timber), turned legs, completing a machine that has no equal at anywhere near the price.

The brooder is a roomy, well made, properly heated and ventilated machine. Fitted with hover, oil lamp and wire scratching yard as illustrated. Both machines complete—ready to use with Taylor "Tycos" thermometers, O. K. burners, galvanized lamps. Egg tester—everything but the oil.

If you don't wish to order direct from this advertisement—don't buy until you send for my 1911 Free Catalog. Write for a copy today.

This illustration shows the double walls, dead air space construction of our machines.

What Users Say

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Dardanelle, Ark.

Dear Sirs:—You have the best incubator on the market, regardless of price, and I am perfectly satisfied with the one I purchased from you. Out of four hatches I got 360 chicks. The Wisconsin requires less attention and burns less oil than any other incubator I have ever used and the regulator is perfect. By following the book of valuable instructions anybody can have good luck and it does not take an experienced person to run a Wisconsin. Any child that can read can run your incubator. I am going to get another right away. JESS C. ADNEY, P.O. Box 185

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Grass Lake, Mich.

Dear Sirs:—I do not think there is a better machine on earth than your incubator. I have taken off four hatches and I got a 100 per cent hatch the first three times and a 99 per cent hatch the fourth time. From the first three hatches I got 115 chicks from 115 eggs, 105 chicks from 105 eggs and 109 chicks from 109 eggs. No incubator on earth can beat that. I will stand by this statement as I can prove it. A. JESSUP, R. No. 3

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Blanchester, Ohio

Gentlemen:—I am well pleased with the way your incubator works. I think that chick nursery underneath your egg tray is all right as you do not have to take the chicks out until they are all hatched and they come downstairs like the children in the morning. I set the incubator three times and got 245 chicks and the best part of it is that they are all running around our yard today and the first two hatches are full grown.

F. FERKEL

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Ripley, Tenn.

Gentlemen:—The Wisconsin Incubator I purchased of you has proven more than satisfactory in every respect. I have had most excellent hatches with it. From my first hatch I got 98 chicks from 110 eggs. I am very glad indeed that I purchased a Wisconsin incubator and brooder, for $10.00, instead of the higher priced machines, which I feel sure could give no better results. I have just taken off another hatch and wish you could see them. They are beauties. M. A. GILLESPIE.

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Pimento, Ind.

Gentlemen:—We had fine results with your incubator. We set it four times and it hatched 90 per cent each time. There are several different makes of machines in this locality but the Wisconsin easily beats them in every way. The brooder is everything that is claimed for it and the two together make a complete outfit for a chicken raiser, and I recommend them to be the best on the market regardless of price.

Proof in a Nutshell

Here are a few comparisons of "proofs" that will help you to avoid making a mistake in deciding which machines to buy;

1st The Wisconsin has double walls with dead air space, a decided advantage. Some have no dead air space.

2nd Egg chamber in the Wisconsin is fully ten inches deep. Some, to cheapen cost of making are scant 8 inches deep.

3rd This makes the nursery less than 2 inches and too shallow for little chicks. In the Wisconsin the nursery is 3 inches deep.

4th In the Wisconsin there is plenty room between the egg tray and the door for the chicks to get in the nursery. In some incubators you have to open the door in order to put the chicks in the nursery.

5th The Wisconsin has large double glass doors through which the thermometer can be easily read. Some have a small single glass, making it necessary to open the door to read thermometer.

6th Workmanship and material in the Wisconsin show decidedly of better grade—machine is larger, better finished—superior in every way and sells for less money. If you will make these comparisons—weigh them well, I know you will order my machines and be better pleased for these are cold facts which actual comparisons have proved.

More Users' Letters

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Elkader, Iowa

Dear Sirs:—I am pleased to say that your Wisconsin Incubator is a success. I placed 125 eggs in it and hatched 110 chicks. This can be done by any one who takes an interest in the business. The three brooders I bought of you are just the things to raise the chicks with. The instructions with your machines are very easy to follow and the eggs are turned easier in your machine than in many high priced machines. I give my machines no attention during the night as many of my neighbors do with inferior makes. ELMER PEAKE

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Odessa, Mo.

Gentlemen:—It pleases us greatly to be able to say that your incubator is a jewel. We have seen several incubators in operation and none have equalled the Wisconsin. Through six hatches last spring we never averaged less than 90 per cent. We also had excellent results with turkey and duck eggs. By closely following your directions your machine has brought us success. We were also pleased to find the material and construction exactly as represented. H. S. REDDICK

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Vickery, Ohio

Dear Sirs:—I am well pleased with your incubator. After I had taken off one hatch, I could have sold it to several of my neighbors but I did not want to sell it. With the first hatch I got 97 chicks from 100 eggs and if the eggs do not hatch it is not the fault of the incubator because it is perfect.

MARY M. STULL

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Friendship, Wis.

Dear Sirs:—I had good success with your 125 egg incubator. I took off three hatches. First hatch, 108 chicks; second hatch, 110 chicks and third hatch, 114 chicks. Your machine will hatch chickens if any of them will. It is very simple to operate as it almost takes care of itself. If I was to buy another machine it would be a Wisconsin, for I am perfectly satisfied with the work it did for me.

M. C. SMITH

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Edwards, Ind.

Gentlemen: — The incubator and brooder I purchased from you cannot be surpassed for doing the work. I had no experience in operating an incubator, but went according to instructions and it hatched every fertile egg and brought out fine, strong, vigorous chicks. No machine, no matter what the price, can do better than that. If anyone wants a fancy priced machine, they are on the market, but they can do no better work than the Wisconsin, and many of them not as good. Could name a few in our neighborhood. A GOOD LIVING

$1,500.00 from 60 Hens in Ten Months on a City Lot 40 Feet Square

Note the condition of the three months' old pullets at the School Farm. These pullets and their ancestors for seven generations have never been allowed to run outside the coops.

TO the average poultryman that would seem impossible and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden 40 feet wide by 40 feet long, we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practiced by the American people, still it can be accomplished by the

Philo System

The Philo System Is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry

and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success

from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks

are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler without any loss, and the broilers are of the very best quality, bringing here 3 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-Months-Old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each Per Month

in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using.

Our new book, THE PHILO SYSTEM OF POULTRY KEEPING, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell

One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel

Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves 2 Cents on Each Chicken

No lamp required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps, or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Testimonials

South Britain, Conn., April 19, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have followed your system as close as I could; the result is a complete success. If there can be any improvement on nature your brooder is it. The first experience I had with your System was last December. I hatched 17 chicks under two hens, put them as soon as hatched in one of your brooders out of doors and at the age of three months I sold them at 35c a pound. They then averaged 2½ pounds each, and the man I sold them to said they were the finest he ever saw, and he wants all I can spare this season. Yours truly,

A. E. NELSON.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—No doubt you will be interested to learn of our success in keeping poultry by the Philo System. Our first year's work is now nearly completed. It has given us an income of over $500.00 from six pedigree hens and one cockerel. Had we understood the work as well as we now do after a year's experience, we could have easily made $1,000.00 from the six hens. In addition to the profits from the sale of pedigree chicks, we have cleared over $960.00 running our hatchery plant, consisting of 56 Cycle hatchers. We are pleased with the results and expect to do better the coming year. With best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours, (MRS.) C. P. GOODRICH.

FROM POULTRY

The Poultry Review

A Monthly Magazine Devoted to Progressive Methods of Poultry Keeping

The Poultry Review is edited by E. W. Philo, author of the Philo System Book and founder of the Philo National Poultry Institute.

It is edited and printed on a practical poultry farm, where experiments are being conducted and reported in full in the Review. New discoveries and improvements are described and illustrated, and each issue contains a number of letters of experience and suggestion from followers of the Philo System.

Rev. W. W. Cox, our associate editor, is conducting a Philo System Plant, and his "Notes from a Six Hen Plant" in each issue have created considerable interest, and contain much valuable instruction. The first year's work on this plant netted over $500.

In addition to the best original articles it is possible to obtain, a review of the best articles from over a hundred publications is made—the "cream" of the poultry press arranged for the busy reader.

Photo taken from the roof of the Philo National Poultry Institute, showing a portion of the Poultry Plant where there are now over 5,000 pedigreed White Orpingtons on less than half an acre of land.

Another thing that is proving of great value to our subscribers is our Information Department. Our editors are always ready to help subscribers. When any difficult problem arises and you see no way of solving it, write us, and we will give you a prompt personal reply. It is quite probable that we have had a similar experience and can help you. Although no charge is made for this service, it is worth many times the subscription price.

For 1911 the Poultry Review guarantees the largest circulation of any paper of its kind—over 100,000 copies monthly, reaching the best class of poultrymen in every state and over thirty foreign countries.

TESTIMONIALS

E. R. Philo, Publisher Poultry Review, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—Of all the poultry journals I take, I would fail in all rather than in the Review as I really like your paper the best of them all. Now I do not say this to curryfavor, nor for any other purpose, because I really like your paper for the pithy and sound articles. There is no dry reading in it as there is in other poultry journals, such as accounts of poultry shows that do not really concern any one but those who are written about. I do not think that any one in any part of the country cares who wins and who does not. It is all right in a local show, written and published by a local paper. Well, success and great success for the Review, and I hope to receive it regularly in the future.

Very sincerely yours,
R. G. Wetmore.

Dear Sir:—The Review came in its new dress today; quite an improvement in looks, and I am much pleased with it, as it tells you what you wish to know in a few words.

Yours for success,

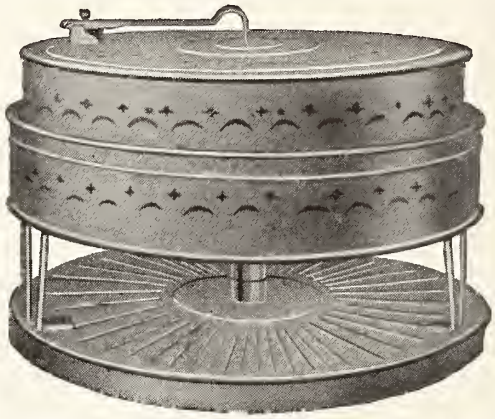
A Little Poultry and a Living

Is the title of a booklet we will mail free. It was written by the author of the Philo System book, who makes everyone of his hens pay him a proft of $50 to $100 each

Cycle Brooder Hatcher, a complete all metal, fire-proof hatching and brooding plant for only $8.00.



The All-Metal, 50-egg Cycle Hatcher only $6.00, complete.

Our New Discoveries Make Poultry Keeping Easy and Profits Sure

Our machines were used exclusively in the original Philo System plant, where over $1,500 FROM 60 HENS IN TEN MONTHS has been cleared from the sale of eggs, baby chicks and fowls, raised on a city lot 40 feet square. One of the largest hatching plants in America saved over $700 this year by using our system of brooding. We sell the best brooder ever made for only $2.50.

One party hatched and raised $500 worth of poultry last year with four metal mothers, and hundreds of others are delighted with our machines and our new way of raising poultry. Our combined machine hatches and broods perfectly at the same time, with only one lamp and one-fifth the oil used in other machines. Once filling the lamp completes the hatch. It runs as steadily as a clock in any room from cellar to garret, and our Long Burning Safety Lamp runs on for weeks without attention. It is the only machine that airs the eggs in the natural way and applies the heat to the chicken like the mother hen.

TESTIMONIALS

The Cycle Hatcher Co.,
Elmira, N. Y.

Sirs: I have used your incubators, both the Cycle Hatcher and the Brooder Hatcher, during two seasons, and found them very satisfactory, as they were easily managed and gave excellent results every time. The Brooder Hatcher makes a convenient place for brooding the little chicks when first hatched, before putting them into the fireless brooders.

That Famous Hatcher—100 Egg Reliable Only $7.15

THIS is the famous hatcher that has been copied far and wide. This is the record-breaking incubator that has a reputation all over the country—in all poultry circles for being the most efficient machine of its type ever put on the market.

For over 29 years I have been manufacturing the Reliable Incubators and Brooders. Now I offer you the result of my 29 years experience in this machine at a price you pay and know you are getting your full measure—your money's worth. For with every single incubator or brooder goes my guarantee and my guarantee is absolute.

Stop to think of it! Only $7.15 for a completely equipped 100 egg size Reliable shipped right to your railroad station, freight charges prepaid (providing you live east of Denver). Compared with others of a given size the Reliable is worth double the money. Look around. Where will you find an incubator made so well, that hatches so well and that is so liberally guaranteed as the Reliable? Where will you find an incubator that you can so safely invest in? It's not to be found.

Don't be mislead by those bargain counter displays or those paper or iron walled, slapped together contrivances. Buy a Reliable that has a guarantee to guard your money. Put your money where you know it will produce profit.

Here's Real Incubator Value

The illustration above shows the Reliable Incubator that sells for such a remarkably low price. This machine for $7.15 is absolutely complete made of the best cypress lumber. Door has double glass front. Has the most modern up-to-date tanks and hot air method of heating and ventilating regulation. Egg trays are of the strongest material and made to last and give service. Has the best regulator and thermometer. The lamps are of the most modernly approved kind consisting of burner, lamp, fount, wick and chimney. It is an all-metal safety lamp and compares with the kind that usually cost well over double.

This is the Machine That Will Save You Money, and I Pay the Freight

$5.35 For 65 Egg Size For the man who conducts a small poultry business or for the beginner this 65 egg machine at only $5.35 is just exactly what you want. It is just exactly like the Reliable shown above only it is built for 65 egg capacity, and this capacity is guaranteed. Has all of my modern equipment and all the latest improvements. Equipped with my regular high class heating and ventilating system—thermometer, lamps, trays, etc.

$11.50 For 220 Egg Size This big hard working machine stands head over heals above any other incubator ever offered for sale. Think of it! A complete 220 egg size, fully equipped, sent to you freight prepaid, for only $11.50. This is probably the most famous hatcher ever built. It's a perfect dandy. It carries my latest patented hot air heating and regulating system, trays, lamps, thermometer. None can equal it. If you conduct your business on a big scale this machine will save you money.

I Pay the Freight to any railroad station in the United States east of Denver. Prices west of Denver on application. This in itself is a great big saving to say nothing of what you save on the incubator itself. We can do this on account of the enormous business we do all over the world. We let you pocket the freight charges.

Free Poultry Book This valuable book tells all about fowls and how to make them make you money. Everyone in the chicken business should have a copy. Write for yours today. It's free.

Here Is My Guaranty With every machine I sell I give the most liberal guaranty ever placed on an incubator. I guarantee perfect operation, perfect material and perfect workmanship in every respect. If you are not satisfied with the Reliable after a fair test, ship it right back at my expense and I'll send a check for your full purchase price without an argument.

Here are a few excellent bargains in my Standard Reliable Brooders: 80 Chick Brooder, $3.90; 120 Chick Brooder, $5.95; 220 Chick Brooder, $6.85. Include one of these in your order and send it today.

Order Today Order any one of these machines offered on this page at once. Don't hesitate or put it off. There is no need to. You cannot possibly lose a cent. You take no chances. I am doing all that. I have so much hard faith in the value of my machines and know so well what they have done for others that I know positively they will do the same for you. The big generous guaranty makes it possible for you to buy with your eyes open. The whole thing is here—on this page. If the incubator you buy does not perform as you think it should, crate it up and ship it back quick at my expense. By return mail you'll get a refund check. Also send for my free books which are of great value to all poultrymen.

CUT OFF 3/4 OF YOUR FEED BILL

IN THE POULTRY BUSINESS

MADE possible by following the directions given by Clarence Ward, son of C. J. Ward, the founder of the oldest, largest and best poultry paper in America—the American Poultry Journal. Mr. Ward was brought up in the poultry business and has made a practical study of it from A to Z. He gives to the poultrymen of this country the benefit of his experience in his new book—which contains 128 pages and is a practical treatise on everything you want to know about the poultry business. It tells you his method of saving three-fourths the feed bill, and many other valuable pointers which will save you many times the price of the book.

Space will not permit a detailed description of the entire book, but the following will give you an excellent idea as to its great value. Besides 30 illustrations of standard bred poultry and poultry houses it contains chapters on the following subjects: The Way to Succeed; Some Interesting Poultry Statistics; The Pleasure of Poultry Culture; Advice to Beginners; Poultry and Pin-Money for Women; Boys and Poultry Culture, Poultry on the Farm, How to Succeed on a Small City Lot; How to Succeed with a Large Market Plant; How to Get Eggs in Winter; How to Feed Young Chickens; Success with Incubators; Success with Brooders; How to Cure Diseases; How to Build Poultry Houses; Plans for Model Poultry Houses; Profits in Poultry Culture; Scientific Feeding.

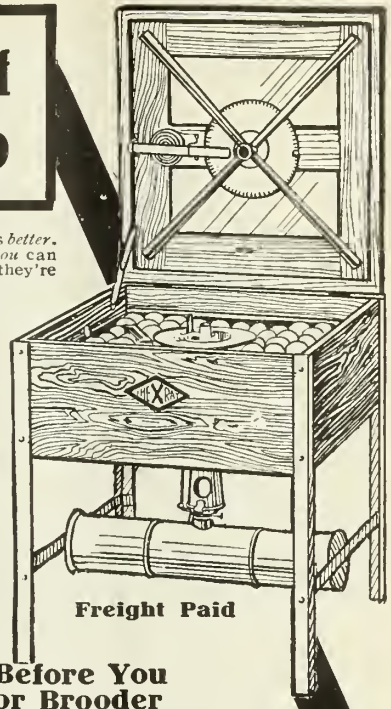
A Better Hatch, With One Gallon of Oil—and One Filling of the Lamp



Freight Paid

Here is the incubator that is made on the only correct principle. It's as different from others as it is better. We have proved it to the satisfaction of thousands—and they have profited. Let us prove it to you so you can profit. We'll show you why every other incubator is wrong—wrong in principle—so no matter how well they're made they can't work as well as this X-Ray Incubator. Note these reasons.

First—the X-Ray Incubator lamp is right square in the center, where it should be—not on the side. Thus there is no cold side. Thousands of thermometer tests show that the temperature is exactly the same all through the egg-chamber always. By placing the lamp underneath we can equip the X-Ray with a big oil tank—holds 4 to 8 quarts of oil—but only 4 quarts are needed to a hatch—we guarantee it. Here's why. Our automatic trip cuts down the flame when necessary—others burn high all the time and let excess heat escape. You never touch the regulator on the X-Ray. It's automatic—the most perfect regulating device ever invented. But that isn't all. Not alone do we save you two-thirds of the oil—and do away with filling the lamp every day.

THE X RAY

has its door at the top—with two double-glass panels. Simply raise the lid to ventilate or to turn eggs. Eggs are never taken out of incubator. And you can see the thermometer every minute without opening any door. Look right through the glass at the top. Even the thermometer we use is different and better than any other. You should know all the facts about this wonderful X-Ray Incubator and X-Ray Brooder. So many advantages over all others that they're worth knowing about. You'll agree with us after you know what X-Rays have done.

X-Ray Brooder

—made on same heating, ventilating and regulating plan as X-Ray Incubators. Just as superior as brooder. The easiest brooder to clean and to keep clean. It raises the chicks—doesn't kill them. Be careful when you buy a brooder. It's even more important than an incubator. Get our book at once and read the facts. They'll interest you vitally.

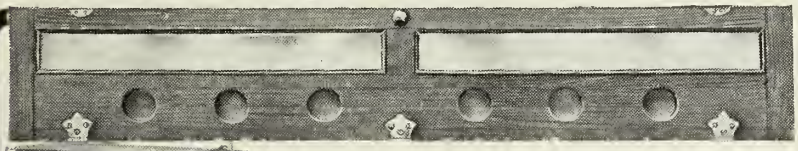
Mandy Lee Incubator Triumph

Now for the first time there is perfect ventilation in incubators. We have solved the problem of pure air, free oxygen supply and drawing off all gases and fumes from hatching chamber.



No guessing with a Mandy Lee

The Mandy Lee DOOR—the Great New Feature

Openings at the Eggs—Send for Book and Read

We have found that the right place to let fresh air and oxygen in to the hatching eggs is not above or below the eggs or off in some corner, but right at the eggs. We ventilate with openings right through the door and it solves every problem of ventilation. There is always a fresh supply of life-giving oxygen and the gases and fumes from the hatching eggs are drawn off as fast as they are generated, instead of being confined in the egg chamber.

Chicks are not "Dead in the Shell" or Hatched Weaklings

You get not only perfect ventilation in Mandy Lee Incubators but you get a machine you can operate by rule. Most incubator manufacturers say nothing about moisture—leave you to guess at it. Guessing has spoiled thousands of hatches. There is no guesswork with a Mandy Lee. It goes like clock-work. We measure moisture just as carefully and accurately as we measure heat. Our patented Hygrometer shows you every moment whether eggs are getting too much or too little moisture. It is easy to control the supply. This great big truth concerns you: The Mandy Lee is the all-climate incubator; the one suited to all conditions; the one that is a success everywhere.

Outdoor Heated and Regulated Brooder is the result of five years work and experiments by Mr. Lee. It is more than a brooder. It is brooder, brooder-house, colony-house and chicken-house all combined. There is a long, narrow hover, curtained on both sides, which supplies direct contact heat to the chicks' backs and the heat is controlled by a regulator, just the same as in an incubator. Chicks are always comfortable and they always have, night and day, roomy quarters with a chance for scratching and exercise. There is no crowding or smothering, and the vigorous and rapidly growing chicks prove that the principle of heating and mothering is right. Our 1911 catalog explains all about Mandy Lee Incubators and Brooders. Write for copy now. Free. Also "Lee's Chicken Talk," Free.

Let Me Save You 50% On A Standard Buffalo Incubator

already ranks the world over as the most wonderful achievement in Incubator building.

In this Incubator I have combined Low Cost and Quality. I can save you 50%—half the cost of others—because I have found a way to make as good a machine as has always been associated with my name and sell it at a low price.

How can I save you half? New materials, new methods of manufacture and a big cut in selling cost have made the New Low-Cost Buffalo a reality.

I have cut out the expensive catalog, "follow-up system", printing, postage, branch houses and managers. I have saved a little on the cost of manufacture, but on the selling cost I have cut to the quick.

I give you a chance to save the one-half that I save; I give you a standard high percentage hatcher made of the best material and workmanship at the lowest possible price.

Made by Skilled Workmen

The New Buffalo is well made. It is constructed with casing of open hearth, galvanized iron. It is lined with fibre board, which eliminates any loss by heat radiation. The walls are double; spaces between being well packed. In addition to a glass door, it has an outer hardwood paneled door to darken the hatching chamber and preserve the heat.

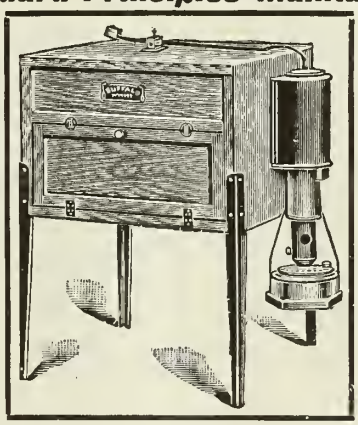
Standard Principles Maintained

In the New Buffalo there has been no change of principles.

The pure air is heated in a three compartment heater, a system which combines Perfect Ventilation with Perfect Heating. In its many years of use, owing to the more successful results obtained it has almost supplanted the hot water system with its cheap and leaking radiator and limited ventilation.

The Egg trays are strongly made; are now covered with Galvanized Wire Cloth and will last for all time.

The Legs on the Incubator are made out of heavy metal; are strong and nicely shaped. (See Illustration.)



Accurate Heat Regulation has been a strong feature of my hatchers, and the new regulator is more perfect than any of the others.

Double Door and Nursery. My experience has proven that the chicks should be left on the tray until the hatch is over. The Double Door makes a dark hatching chamber in which the chicks do not pile up. It also makes a warmer front. All these essential features are found only in the New Buffalo.

I am offering all of these new improvements in the Standard Buffalo Incubator at half-price---a saving of 50% to you. Why should you pay twice my price for an incubator not up to the New Buffalo Standard?

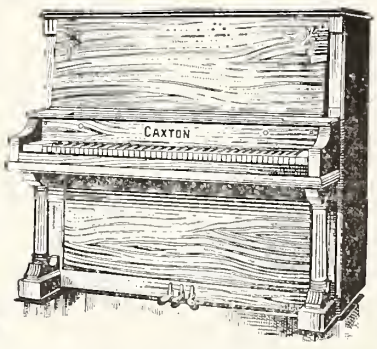
HAVE YOU THE CASH

FOR THIS ELEGANT $300 CAXTON PIANO?

If you are in a position to pay cash we invite you to take advantage of our wonderful selling plan whereby one-half the usual purchase price is saved to our customers. If you are a cash customer and purchase a piano in the ordinary way through your local dealer, you pay two or three extra profits and commissions. The bulk of the piano business is done on long time, both to local dealers and in turn to their customers. It is the most cumbersome, costly and extravagant method imaginable and the cash customer bears the burden of losses occasioned by time payments. The local dealer sells but few pianos each year and must make a large profit to oover his enormous selling expense, oommissions to agents teachers and friends, etc We save you all this extra expense. You pay only one small manufacturer's profit.

Buy Direct

From the Factory and save all extra profits. We charge you only one small profit to cover cost of marketing the piano direct to you.



You Take No Chance

The Caxton Piano is fully guaranteed for 10 years. We do not expect you to buy without seeing and trying it, and comparing it with instruments at double the price.

Do not confuse this high grade instrument with instruments at a similar price advertised to be sold on time at a dollar a week. We could not afford to sell it to you on time at anywhere near the price advertised We do not tie up large sums of money on time contracts. We keep our capital turning over, making a small profit on each sale. THE SAVING IS YOURS. Have you the business head to take advantage of it?

The Caxton Piano is made in quarter sawed fancy oak and beautiful, figured mahogeny veneers. Double veneered and cross banded, inside and out, with ivory keys. It is a high grade, full sized, full scale piano, with full iron plate, bushed tuning pins, patent muffler or practice attachment, light, responsive action and free sweet tone. Would be a bargain in any local dealer's store at $300.00. In fact for over 10 years this was its retail price, but our new direct from the factory to the consumer plan of selling them—which eliminates all commissions, time payments, dealers, and other unnecessary and wasteful selling expenses—permits us to sell them at a trifle more than one-half the regular retail price—$157.50.

TWO WEEKS FREE TRIAL Send us reference and we will send you this $300.00 piano, with stool, on trial for two weeks with the understanding that if at the end of that time you decide to keep it you are to pay us $157.50 cash, if not, you are to ship it back to us at our expense. If you care to send the money in advance as evidence of good faith, we will send free an elegant silk piano scarf and instruction book. In this case if you do not decide to keep the piano, and you are not perfectly satisfied in every way that you have received a genuine bargain, your money will be returned at once.

RHODE ISLAND REDS

How to Breed and Judge Them
By THEO. HEWES

Is the Best and Only Complete Treatise Ever Published on this Great Variety

There is no breed so widely advertised to-day as the Rhode Island Reds and no breed in which there is such a wide difference of opinion as to what constitutes perfection.

RHODE ISLAND REDS; HOW TO BREED AND JUDGE THEM is better than the STANDARD OF PERFECTION

because it goes into detail and describes every section, with numerous illustrations, showing ideal and defective shape and color, thus making scoring so simple that anyone can understand. Some sections have four or five illustrations showing the several defects that may be found in them, with the proper discount for the same as applied by our leading judges.

Size of Book 11 1-2 by 8 1-2 in. Contains over 50 pages, including cover, which is printed in three colors, and all on good half-tone paper. PRICE $1.00

In addition to this most complete series of articles on scoring, there are numerous articles from America's foremost Red breeders on every phase of Red breeding. This book tells you just what you want to know. It tells you how to mate your pens; how to grow your chicks; how to select your show birds; in fact, it tells you how to grow, exhibit and make money out of Reds.

This book is sold on approval. The price is $1.00, and, dear reader, if you are not satisfied with your bargain, send us back the book and we will refund your money.

WORLD'S FOREMOST WHITE WYANDOTTES

Have been the greatest winners for the past fifteen years at the leading shows of the United States and Canada. : : : :

Many owe their success to my strain because I have made them a winning strain with my great care and study for over 20 years. I have won the highest honors including many 1st and 2d prizes at Madison Square, N. Y., Worlds Fair, Boston, Chicago, and my greatest success has been in breeding my own winners, what very few can claim in their winnings. I have sold winners for every prominent show in the U. S. and Canada, and the past year I sold prominent winners, many of them 1st and special prize winners for best in shape and color at Alaska-Youkon Exposition at Seattle, also Chicago, Indianapolis, Madison Square, N. Y., Boston, Pittsburg, Pa., Louisville, Ky., Montreal aod Ottawa, Ont., and other shows many of them in the strongest competition with birdsbought from every noted breeder in America.

I sell all my stock on approval. That is, if not satisfactory can be returned at my expense and I will freely return your money in full. That alone should prove what I claim and my type was considered best at New York shows a year ago above all other breeders; that is, the low blockey type and stay white birds. In fact, have bred out the brass years ago. I have also bred for vigor and great laying and I have the farm for it. I keep my fowls in open front coops and chicks have free farm range. If you want some high class breeders or show birds write me.

My egg trade has been one of my best ads. I have for many years gained many of my best patrons with my egg trade. I sell eggs from only the best matings, same as I hatch from and from only carefully selected matings. At $5.00 per sit, or 3 sittings for $12.00, will be limited and only the early ones will be sure of eggs on time so if you place order now, with amount, you can have them when wanted, for I book only limited number for any one time, Satisfied customers have been my best ad. The Value of Proper Feeding.

The Kinds of Food to Feed and the Proper Methods of Feeding Them Depend Entirely Upon What We Wish to Obtain, Whether It be Rapid Maturity Egg Production, Fertility of Eggs, Etc.

By Rev. C. E. Petersen.

IT would seem that if there are any points in the proper handling of poultry that need continuous elucidation it is the subject on which we are now dealing, for with all there has been written on the subject there are more annual losses from improper diet than from any other source, including all the new ailments said to be caused by faulty and continuous artificial incubation, which last statement is by no means conclusive in spite of what some isolated correspondent may say to the contrary. We are firmly convinced in our own mind that improper diet has more to do with the large mortality of incubator chickens than any other factor, for the feeding and care is delegated to the poultryman in the place of the hen, and perhaps his faulty methods are more to be blamed than faulty incubation, which is only at the most one factor to be dealt with in the successful rearing of chickens.

We have lived through the most progressive years of modern poultry culture, as from boyhood we have been interested in the study of it, and we have noticed the evolution of poultry feeding and all other details connected with it.

We have raised our chickens as well on one kind of food as another, and have no more mortality from moist food than we have had from dry food, and we have fed ever so often during the day and have had it before them all the time, and in each case there has been partly success and partly failure, but it has only been when we so combined both methods that the best features of all were utilized that we got the best success and the minimum of mortality among our chicks and our own experience is backed up by that of every poultryman who is enough interested in his own welfare and the chickens to go by experience rather than by fads, which seems nowadays to be the rule rather than the exception in most everything pertaining to poultry culture.

There seems to be a misunderstanding among beginners, and I am sorry to say even among those who ought to know better, as to how to differentiate between feeding and forcing, and until a right comprehension of the two systems is obtained there always will be more or less loss sustained by the breeders of fancy poultry.

Forcing for growth needs expert handling by competent poultrymen who are in the business to get the maximum growth on broilers and roasters in the shortest possible time, as it is said to make a finer grade of flesh, and, of course, reduces expenses to the minimum in making them ready for the market.

Feeding fancy poultry is also a method of obtaining growth, but not in the shortest possible time, but by judicious blending of the foodstuffs used, obtain stamina, a large frame and a system which is normal in all its inner functional organs.

In the last case soft food should be fed sparingly, or the consequences will inevitably result in an enlarged liver which is the beginning of other functional troubles which in the end proves disastrous to the birds if they manage to live until mature.

We don't believe in using soft food in abundance to stock that is to be used for breeding purposes; we do not want them fat and plump, but large in frame and rangy, robust birds that can run and roam and are entirely free from the wobbly gyrations of the overfed dyspeptic chick that all over carries the same appearance as does an illy-nourished child.

Any chick will eat till surfeited if they get the chance and work around all day with extended crops till finally appetite is lost and then comes the drooping state and the inactive season that in most cases winds up with the loss of the chicken.

I believe in continuous change of diet, and never feed to repletion till the evening meal, when I want them to have their crop full, but during the day little and often has given me the very best results during my experience with fancy poultry.

All the other methods advocated have never proven successful with me, and I have given them a fair trial, and though some of them may put money in the coffers of the grain merchant they will certainly result in loss to the poultryman, not always, however, in the first season, as the bad work is generally hidden and working against a strong, robust constitution and then the trouble begins, with the chicks which are produced by parent stock whose functional organs have been disordered by improper feeding methods, which in the beginning seemed all right, but in the end proved anything but right.

ROSE COMB RHODE ISLAND RED HEN.
"Miss Red Bird." First prize winner as pullet at Detroit, Jan. 12-18, 1910. First prize winner as hen at Chicago, Dec. 8-14, 1910. Owned, bred and exhibited by Irving A. and Frank C. Sibley, Box B, South Bend Ind.

It is usual to speak of, and to treat, the common fowl as graminivorous and the general belief that it is so has led to more than half the losses and disappointments of those who have tried to keep them in situations where the birds had not an opportunity to correct, by their own foraging, the mistakes of their owners. There are few animals that could be described so correctly as essentially omnivorous.

The fowl is not only omnivorous, but, unlike many other omnivorous creatures, it cannot keep in anything approaching good health on any one kind of food. The pig will flourish on any kind of grain alone, on peaches and grass and even almost entirely on meat. The fowl will not keep in health either on grain, or grass, or on meat alone, but must have all three, and some minerals as well. When very much pressed with hunger or kept short of gravel, it will swallow stones as large as a bean, not only without injury, but with the best effect upon its health and appearance, whatever else the faddist has to say just now on the question of gravel not being necessary whatever, but only a bad habit contracted by the birds, but when kept on any one description of food it droops, looks unhealthy and is certain to prove unprofitable.

One noted writer says: "For the past fifty years it has been very fashionable to parade chemical discoveries as to the constituents of food, as they were the ultimate authority that rendered all records of experience unnecessary, and to treat as a matter little worthy of notice the demands of each animal machine to have that nourishment presented to it in such combination as shall be consistent with the design for which that machine was constructed. We all understand that 5 per cent too much oxygen in the air we breathe would be just as fatal to us as 5 per cent too little, while the conducting nitrogen is well understood to be essential to life as the vitalizing oxygen, but, even our ablest physiologists have shown reluctance to recognize the equal importance of a conducting medium in combination with the nourishing elements of our food."

When Magendie found that dogs would die in about a month fed exclusively on water and sugar, or oil, or gum, or butter, or white bread, he at once harassed his brain to find out some chemical cause for their death, and, taking it for granted that it must be in consequence of deficiency of nourishing property, he came at length to the learned conclusion that dogs died because all these substances were deficient in azote. With all his accurate knowledge of the construction of the alimentary canal of these dogs, it seems never to have dawned on his chemical brain that a physical barrier stood in the way of the dogs' getting any nourishment from such food, whatever it might contain. He seems never to have thought of the sufficiently obvious fact that such substances could never pass through the alimentary canal, and could therefore never give up their nourishment to the dog's blood.

When sufficient sawdust was mixed with these clammy substances, all his chemical theories proved as empty and fallacious, though by no means as mischievous, as John Brown's bleeding and brandy cures, and the dogs lived and thrived with or without azote.

By those who will really look into nature, and read there for themselves, instead of riding away on learned hobbies, facts will be seen every day to show that human beings and animals can be, and often are, starved to death like Magendie's dogs, by the excessively nutritious character of their food.

Other experiments of the same kind and of modern date go to show that we are entirely correct in the position we have always taken that the inordinate supply of concentrated foodstuff will do much more harm than good and that bulk must be given in an bundant manner to obtain the very best success.

It has frequently been stated that the birds will balance their own rations, but I never put much confidence in this statement, for observation has taught me to the contrary. There are some kinds of grain that they prefer and will in every instance where free access can be had to it, fill themselves with it and leave all the other grain untouched except when the more palatable supply is gone, they will then eat the rest because there is nothing else to get.

Feeding for growth of the bone structures, feeding for quick development up to the broiler stage, feeding for eggs, feeding for strong fertility of eggs, and feeding for strongly hatchable eggs in connection with the last, all takes different feeding methods and what will do for one will not do for another.

In the breeding of fancy fowls which are invariably bred to feather for exhibition purposes, forcing must not be employed, and such breeding materials should be given as will prolong the time before the first egg is laid.

We cannot induce early maturity, and expect a full development of the more desirable features in an exhibition fowl, for it will take fully six months and seven to eight in some of the larger breeds before the growing period is completed, and this period will invariably come to a close if the feeding has been conducted on a basis of getting eggs as quickly as possible.

In the case of growing fowls up to a strong, robust condition of health and activity and large-framed birds representative of their breed, exercise, plenty of rough feed such as cabbage, cut clover, roots of any kind and dry hard grain is all that is necessary, providing the chickens were hatched in time, and some of the grain should be so placed that it will furnish exercise for the birds. Such treatment will not only produce strongly fertile eggs, but eggs that are hatchable and that will produce strong livable chickens.

When range can be given to the birds to such an extent that they can furnish themselves with green food the above is, of course, not necessary, but where this cannot be given it must be supplied to them.

Tough, hard grass late in the season does not suffice, and for that reason it is well to cut it frequently, which will start up a new supply of more palatable food in this line.

The problem is, not how to keep the hens, but how to make the hens keep you.

The man who is always studying the comfort of his chickens and supplying the things needed to promote their comfort, is the one who never complains that poultry don't pay.

Buyers Complaints.

Occassionally They are Well Founded, But Too Often They are Not. Be Sure You are Right Before You Complain.

By B. S. Harmon.

IN an industry like the poultry business it is inevitable that more or less complaints should be made every year. It is obvious that it is to the advantage of the industry that such complaints should be reduced to the minimum. But it is not so clear just how this reduction can be made.

The complaints may be classified as just and unjust. The just complaints are due to some fault or negligence of the seller, and the unjust complaints are due to the ignorance or fault of the buyer.

The greater number of complaints arise from the practice of selling eggs for hatching. If such sales ceased such complaints would come to an end, but it is not feasible to stop the sale of eggs. Many, indeed most, of the breeders sell and will continue to sell eggs for hatching, because such sales bring in ready money when it is specially needed. Even if, as a few breeders believe, it is more profitable to sell fowls than to sell eggs, or than to sell both eggs and fowls, eggs for hatching will be generally offered for sale.

A group of exhibition hens, with the famous "Florence Blue" in center, which figured in the winnings of the recent Ft. Wayne show. Bred and owned by Purl H. Weikal, Marion, Ind.

Of the complaints arising from the sale of eggs for hatching a very large percentage is wholly unjust. The eggs do not hatch for various reasons; improper handling of the packages by the express companies, unfaithful incubation of them by the hens, overheating or underheating by incubation, and the like, reduce the number of chickens and sometimes even to the zero mark. But if the eggs were fertile and fresh when shipped, such failures are not due to the fault of the seller and against him the buyer has no reasonable ground of complaint.

The chickens hatched from purchased eggs may not develop into fine specimens, and even if they do not the seller may not be to blame. Fine birds —in size, shape and color—depend in no small degree upon the care they receive in rearing, and it is entirely possible to so feed and rear a flock of chickens hatched from the finest breeding stock, mated with skill, as to have in the fall a flock of culls fitted only for the butcher and none too well fitted for him. In such a case the buyer should swallow his disappointment and not complain to the seller about the results of his own ignorance or neglect.

It is only in those cases where the seller sends out eggs from inferior birds, or eggs which were not reasonably fertile when shipped, or which were carelessly packed and because of such carelessness were broken in transit, or which had been kept for too long a time before shipment, that the seller is at fault and the buyer has a right to complain. And, while poultry breeders are men and not angels and have the infirmities which belong to men, they are as a body honest and honorable, and cases of this sort, in comparison with the bulk of the business done, are few indeed; and if complaints were made only in such cases, the number would be so small as to be a negligible quantity.

Complaints in reference to purchased fowls are fewer than those in reference to eggs, and arise, in many instances, from the ignorance of the buyer. Many buyers have yet to learn that the perfect bird has not yet been produced, and if it had been it would be priceless. They expect perfection for a few dollars, and when they do not receive it, they utter woeful complaints. A few years later, when they have got rid of some of their former ignorance, they will be heartily ashamed of these complainings.

But there are cases where the seller, through ignorance or fraud, sends birds which are not what they are represented to be, and in such cases, few though they be, the buyer has a right to complain

To reduce complaints, it is evident, that buyers should first satisfy themselves that they have a just cause for complaining. They should settle clearly the preliminary question of through whose fault their disappointment has arisen. Until they have done this and are able to say that they are without fault, they should hold their peace. And the sellers, on their part, should use the utmost care to avoid any just cause for fault-finding; should never misrepresent what they have for sale, and should ship in the most approved manner only eggs or stock equal to, or better than, their representations. In other words a campaign of education is necessary, if complaints are to be reduced to the minimum. Each party to a transaction needs to know his rights and duties. Such knowledge will not prevent cases of intentional fraud, but it will prevent the making of unreasonable and unjust complaints, and thus greatly reduce the total number made. Against the rare cases of fraud the strong arm of the law can be invoked and the perpetrator be rigorously punished. But a fraudulent poultryman, we are proud and happy to believe, is a rara avis, and appears upon the scene only at long intervals and usually alone. Like venomous snakes in thickly settled communities, he is a possibility, but of such rare occurrence that no special precautions are needed to guard against his bite.

Effects of Prejudice in Poultry Breeding.

Three Forms of Prejudice That are More or Less Common and that Should Not be Found in Breeders, Judges and Others.

By H. S. Babcock.

PREJUDICE is a premature opinion, formed without due examination of the merits and demerits of any subject, and may be either favorable or unfavorable, though the latter is the more common meaning attached to the term. One may be prejudiced in favor of or in opposition to any proposition. As prejudice influences to a greater or less extent all classes and conditions of mankind, it has, of course, played a part in the poultry industry.

In the United States, in respect to dressed poultry, there has prevailed and still prevails a prejudice in favor of yellow shanks and yellow skin. It is not easy to convince the American housewife that color has nothing to do with the edible quality of dressed poultry. Though the shanks are not eaten, and the skin, whatever its original color, is always brown when the fowl is roasted, she will still demand the yellow shanks and the yellow skin when she purchases a chicken. Explain to her that white shanks and a white skin are demanded by the English and dark shanks and a white skin by the French, a race of epicures, her mind will be unmoved, for the prejudice in favor of yellow shanks and a yellow skin is too firmly seated.

In the United States, too, a prejudice against black plumage upon fowls has long prevailed, and, although this prejudice shows signs of weakening and black fowls seem to be gaining in public esteem, it still exists. And it has no more substantial basis than that black fowls, when dressed at a time the feathers are freshly growing, have less attractive carcasses, and that they have black or dark shanks. One may argue that during the greater part of the year a black fowl may be plucked as clean as even a white one; that the shanks are not an edible part of the fowl; that black plumage is beautiful, especially when it shows a rich green iridescence; that it enables the fowls to look well in situations where light-colored fowls would appear unsightly; that it is a color which has been found specially adapted to the warmer parts of the United States; and that by many it is regarded as a certain indication of hardiness; and yet prejudice has been able in the past to triumph over all these reasons and "black-ball" fowls of this color, or, at least, prevent them from attaining anything like the degree of popularity to which their merits entitle them.

At the present time there seems to be a prejudice in favor of extreme size. Big fowls are demanded. Buyers do not stop to examine carefully the question of economic merits; they do not inquire whether fowls of medium size for the variety will be more profitable; they do not ask which will pay the best, big, medium or small fowls; they demand the big ones. If the overgrown ones were really the best this would not matter. But if, as many intelligent breeders and disinterested observers believe, the fowls of medium size for the breed are really the best and the most profitable, it is a matter of supreme importance that the public mind should be freed from its prejudice.

In the exhibitions a prejudiced judge is equivalent to an incompetent judge. Some judges enter the exhibition with an ideal formed not strictly on standard lines but on standard lines bent this way and twisted that by their personal prejudices. They may have bred a certain type of fowl, and all fowls which do not conform to that type they consider to be defective. If their type were standard, it would not be a prejudiced type, but if it is built upon their own notions, irrespective of the standard, then it is a matter of prejudice and their judgments will be harmful. And herein lies the danger of the specialty judge. A man, who for years has been breeding a single variety, is in danger of having his own type of fowls so impressed upon his mind, that the standard type will be forgotten or modified according to his preconceived notions, and the judging will be done, not according to the standard type but according to the judge's type. His awards will be honestly made, but they will also be erroneously made to the extent that his type differs from the standard type. Of course all specialty judges are not prejudiced; some are men capable of construing and applying standard requirements with accuracy and impartiality.

Exhibitors are in even greater danger than judges of being prejudiced. It is entirely reasonable to suppose that a large percentage of the "kicks" upon the work of judges arises from the prejudice of exhibitors. Their particular type of fowl—including color, carriage and shape—seems to them superior to that of their rivals, and if the judge doesn't happen to agree with them in this belief, they have a grievance to voice, and too many give voice to their supposed grievances.

The most contemptible and least defensible prejudice is that which one poultryman holds against another. Such prejudice is a blot upon human nature, and is wholly inexcusable. It leads not only to unjust judgments but to unjust acts, and should be extirpated quickly and thoroughly.

The remedy for prejudice is to keep an open mind, examine every subject thoroughly before forming an opinion, and, even when an opinion has been formed, hold it subject to modification upon the reception of new evidence. And this is our plain duty, both as poultrymen and as men. If we do this, we shall always give to every one "a square deal," and that every one is entitled to as a fundamental human right.

Despite the advice to select a breed for the special purpose one has in view andd with reference to climatic conditions and geological formation, the element of greatest importance in making a choice is one's individual preferences. The fowl you like the best is the best fowl for you, because to such a fowl you will give the care that is necessary to make it thrive. Your liking for it will make your labor seem light.

Pithy Paragraphs Pointedly Put.

Some Good Sound Horse Sense Delivered in an Interesting Style and in Effective Doses by that Veteran Fancier and Breeder, H. S. Babcock.

NEVER, in the history of the poultry industry in America, has the outlook been more cheering than it is now. Dressed poultry and eggs for consumption have brought and will bring high prices. Eggs for hatching and fowls for breeding and exhibition command the highest prices ever recorded, and these prices are not only asked but received. New avenues for the use of poultry products are opening, and a greater interest in poultry is manifested by the general public. The current year bids fair to be a record-breaker in poultry progress, profit and prosperity. It is a good time to stay in the game, if you are already in, and a good time to get into the game, if you are not yet in it.

The right time to start in poultry breeding is now. Every season's delay puts you back a whole year. Delays are unprofitable even if they are not dangerous. Don't delay.

Separation, isolation and medication for the sick fowls, but don't have more of them than you can help. Ventilation, aeration and sanitation make and keep fowls well.

it is necessary to keep adding to it from month to month. Like a snowball, the rolling builds up the body, and the more it is rolled the faster it will increase.

February.

The Most Important Duty of the Month Is the Mating of the Breeding Pens—Methods of the Veterans.

By Observer.

HOW many times did you write 1910 last month?

The ill-natured man asks a conundrum, "In what month do women talk the least?" The answer is, of course, February, for it has the fewest days.

But what February lacks in extent, it makes up in intent. The old rule, "When the days begin to lengthen, the cold begins to strengthen," finds its culmination of proof in February.

One is reconciled somewhat to the coldness of February by the thought of the brevity—the four weeks will soon be gone, and after the middle of the month one may reasonably anticipate that the cold will begin to wane.

February fourteenth—why that is St. Valentine's day, when men and birds are supposed to seek their mates. If one has not already done so, it is time the mating of the breeding pens was made. One should not delay it any longer.

Mating the fowls—that is the crucial test of the breeder, the most important act he has to perform, the one which demands his highest skill, the act from which his success or failure for the ensuing year will flow. It is not something to be done carelessly, but demands his best thought and most painstaking study.

Let me divulge a secret for the benefit of the novice. The best breeders do not leave the study preparatory to mating until the time of actually putting the fowls together. That study began with the putting forth of the first feathers on the young chickens, has continued during their growth and culminates in the actual bringing of the birds into the same pen.

There is a reason for this—in fact, several of them. Take, for illustration, a breed with the black-red coloration. The cockerels and pullets are alike in their first feathers, both having the female color and markings. One desires a cockerel to use for the production of the best colored pullets. He observes the cockerels in their first feathers, and one, or two, or three, of them have the shade of color which he wishes to reproduce in his pullets another year. These cockerels are marked and the best one of them eventually heads the breeder's pullet-breeding pen. That's one reason for early study, and a reason the beginner should not forget.

Another reason for continuous study. By keeping the characteristics of the chickens before him the breeder is able to begin culling at an early date. He removes the chickens which he knows will never be of service as breeding or exhibition stock, in order that the others may have a better chance for development.

But the most important reason is that such continuous study of his fowls is the only way in which he can really know them, and to mate intelligently he must have as complete a knowledge as possible of all of their characteristics. When he comes to the actual mating there is little left to be done except a final examination of the birds to see if any point has escaped his notice and the work of putting them into the same pen.

If a veteran does this, should not the novice do likewise? Can a novice with his want of experience hope to do successfully in an hour what a veteran has spent months in doing? And yet some act as if they thought they could. Never was there a greater mistake in breeding made than this—leaving the study of the birds to be mated to the hour when they must be put together. Reform at once. Don't let your novitiate become unduly prolonged. Be a veteran as soon as possible by adopting a veteran's methods. Experience of others may teach us much, if we will only learn. The trouble with many is that they will learn only from their own experience, and of them it was said, "Experience teaches a dear school, but fools will learn in no other."

Spend all the time needful in selecting the brood cock. I don't like the expression, "The male is half the pen," because it is impossible to express hereditary truths with mathematical exactness. The male is important—he may be less than half or a good deal more than half of the pen. He may be so prepotent that the chickens will all, or nearly all, resemble him. But at any rate, his blood and breeding tendencies will be represented in all the chickens hatched from the pen of which he is the head, and his selection is a matter of vital importance.

But, having obtained the best male available for your purpose, don't think the selection of the females can be slighted. Some females are very prepotent. I have, at the time this is written, in one of my yards a pullet which has the characteristics of her dam and of her granddam, but in which the characteristics of the male line, so far as it differed from the female, are very feebly represented. The granddam has been able to transmit her characteristics in a striking manner to the third generation, and whether it will end there I cannot predict. But this I do know, that a good breeder will carefully select the females for his breeding pens.

Suppose that the best male and the best females are selected, are they now ready to be put together? You answer, "Yes." But you are wrong. The male and females must be selected with reference to each other, and this selection must be made with a view to what it is desired to produce. The very best male and the very best females you may possess, may be, after all, utterly unsuited to breed together. They might be matched for exhibition, but not mated for breeding. The older poultrymen may recall the paper that was used and the ink that was spilled over the question whether the term "breeding pen" or the term "exhibition pen" should be used in poultry shows. I believe I was the earliest advocate, certainly one of the most strenuous, in behalf of substituting "exhibition pen" for "breeding pen," because, I argued, the birds, as shown, would not breed properly, but they did make a nice exhibition. And now, I believe, that the term "exhibition pen" is generally used in premium lists. One need only to refer to the Barred Plymouth Rock to see the necessity of selecting male and females with reference to each other. Mate an exhibition male with exhibition females of this variety and what is the result? Cockerels and pullets inferior to their sire and dams. And in all breeds, not only in respect to color and markings, but in other respects, the selection of the breeding stock must be made with reference of one sex to the other.

"But," you exclaim, "how am I ever to learn to do all this?" Ah! you begin to realize the importance and difficulty of correctly mating up your pens of fowls, that it was truth I uttered when I said that mating was "the crucial test of the breeder." But let me tell you, the realization of the difficulties of doing this and of your own incompetency, is the first step towards success. You have reached the place where you see the need of learning, and from there on you will begin seriously to study your fowls with reference to this difficult but necessary act. I might detail to you how to mate different varieties, but the best way of learning is to see how your most successful neighbors are doing; then study your fowls as carefully as they do, and make your matings. Study the results you obtain. Note in what respects you have failed. Try to remedy the mistakes made. And little by little you will find yourself overcoming difficulties and securing better results. And as your results improve your study will increase, until you will begin your work of mating by studying the young chickens and following their development from week to week and month to month until they are actually put into the breeding yards to become the sires and dams of progeny better than themselves.

By the way, who was guilty of starting the idea that a thunder storm would prevent eggs from hatching? Let him acknowledge his offense and and throw himself upon the mercy of the court. We have had hens setting at a time when severe thunder-storms have occurred. Some have brought off full broods of lively chicks; others have failed to hatch though sitting side by side. We have had hens sitting side by side, during fair weather; some have hatched full broods, and some have hatched nothing. Thunder storms don't seem to affect our hens, and I don't believe such storms affect the hatching of eggs for other people. Of course, if a hen is setting out of doors, with no protection over her, and a severe rain falls, whether accompanied by thunder or not, the eggs may get such a drenching that they will fail to hatch,—the unhatched chickens being actually drowned in their shells or chilled to death. But thunder and lightning—bah! Tell that to the gullible who can be made to believe anything, even to the statement that a bit of iron—preferably a plowshare—will ward off the evil effects of thunder and lightning. By the way, will the believers in this theory please explain whether it is the thunder or the lightning, which does the job for them, the presence of electricity in the atmosphere or the big noise which kills the chicks within the egg. It would be interesting to know just what they do believe, anyway.

It is astonishing how long-lived are some superstitions and to what follies the human mind will commit itself. Not so long ago we read of the influence of the moon upon hatching, and upon the character of the chickens hatched. Then there was an attempt to revive the blue-glass theory. To this day, many people select long eggs from which to hatch cockerels and round eggs from which to hatch pullets, forgetting that, with a few exceptions, each hen lays eggs of substantially the same shape the greater part of her life. More than five hundred theories have been advanced upon this question of sex alone. You may prove the error of these various theories and think that they are dead, but in time you will see them appear as cheerful as if they had never known defeat. You "have scotched the snake, not killed it." Can you kill it? Is there something in the human mind that responds kindly to the appeal of error? Was Barnum right when he said that the American public liked to be humbugged? Can that saying be broadened so as to include all races of men? It sometimes looks that way. Men appear to like to be taken in for the sake of the sensation which comes with the getting in and getting out again. It has been my lot to fight humbugs for years, and the results, temporarily satisfactory, never seem to be permanent. It is the old myth of Sisyplius, repeated in modern days,

"With useless endeavour
Forever, forever,
Is Sisyplius rolling
His stone up the mountain!"

But the performance of this duty, nevertheless, is pleasant, because it allows the fighting blood, long subdued to the ways of peace, to course swiftly through the veins; because the triumph of the time over the false is a goodly sight; because it rejoices the heart to be of service to one's fellows in breaking the bonds which bind them and bringing them into liberty and light; and because fidelity to duty meets with the approval of conscience and such approval increases one's honest self-respect. Even if we cannot destroy error and superstition,—if the stone of Sisyplius, when it has been rolled to the high hill's top, will with swift rebound return to the bottom—we may wound them so that, in our day, they will be powerless for evil, and when our places are filled by our children or our children's children, and error and superstition reappear, perhaps, with the weapons we have fashioned, the later generations may be able again to beat the monsters into a state of "innocuous desuetude." Nor or we to forget that life is perfected, not by the things accomplished, but by the efforts made. Strength comes from striving. The oak, shielded from the winds, would be weak; exposed to every blast that blows, struggling with the tempests, it grows in strength and grandeur. Like the oak, man must struggle if he would be strong; without strife his strength would be weakness; but through constant effort, fighting foes within and foes without, grappling with error and superstition, straining every muscle to its utmost tension, he reaches the true statue of manhood and becomes that most glorious of created beings, a manly man.

Clean up, that is, begin with the floor and end with the ceiling. Whitewash does pretty well for the upper part of the work.

The instruction found in the columns of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is the best and most reliable that money can buy, and that the most practical and successful poultrymen of America can produce. The Journal is therefore a school for the amateur and a help to the expert, and neither can afford to be without it.

We want agents everywhere, and will pay liberally for good workers. Write us for terms.

For the year 1911, SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL guarantees an average monthly circulation of 30,000 copies.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is a monthly magazine of national circulation and advertisers secure a profitable business from all sections. Changes of ads must be received not later than the 15th of the month, and new ads the 20th, in order to insure insertion in the month following.

SUBSCRIBERS GUARANTEED AGAINST LOSS.

It is the policy of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL to accept advertisements from only thoroughly honorable poultrymen and business firms. Great care is taken in this respect. We therefore guarantee all our subscribers against loss through deliberate fraud on the part of any display advertiser in our columns. If by chance any subscriber should be swindled in this way we will make good his loss if within 30 days from the time of sending his order to the advertiser he will furnish proof that will enable us to convict the advertiser of intentional fraud, and provided the subscriber proves to us that when writing to the advertiser he stated that the ad was seen in SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL.

The planless man is usually a failure. It is as much one's duty to plan intelligently as it is to execute wisely. The latter, without the former, is impossible.

Don't count your chickens until they are hatched, don't reckon the number of your prizes until they are won, and don't spend your profits until they are made. But it is well to do considerable figuring, in order to hatch the necessary number of chickens, win the desired prizes, and secure the wished-for profits.

A Little Talk to Our Readers

Our purpose is to make each number of this journal more interesting and more helpful than any of its predecessors. We desire to have it so interesting that each subscriber shall look forward to the date of the next issue with pleasurable anticipation, and so helpful that each reader will arise from its perusal with the feeling that he has learned something which will be of service to him.

To accomplish these purposes we must ever keep in view the fact that the needs of the readers are many and varied. The journal reaches not one but many classes, from the one who is upon the threshold of taking up the breeding of poultry to the veteran with many years of experience behind him. There must be something for all of these classes. No one class can be allowed to dominate the matter furnished. For the would-be breeder, there must be something to attract him, something to turn his half-formed purpose into a settled resolution to undertake the breeding of fine fowls. For the beginner there needs be more or less elementary instruction to enable him to avoid the pitfalls dug by ignorance, and the mistakes common to all who are entering upon an untried field of endeavor. And for the veteran breeder there must be provided more abstruse discussions of fundamental laws of breeding and of the various live topics and questions of the hour. The journal must stand not for one but for all classes, who are or may be made to be interested in poultry.

In doing such a work, the interests of the advertisers must not be, and if the work is well done, will not be forgotten. "He pays the freight." It is necessary to reach the classes who have money to invest in poultry and who will so invest their money. His advertising must pay or he will cease to be an advertiser. And this is not a selfish view to take of the subject, for the seller and the buyer have mutual interests, and the journal which serves the one also serves the other. It is just as necessary for the buyer to know where to purchase as it is for the seller to know where to dispose of his stock.

To do all these things successfully the editor must have the co-operation of those who can furnish the necessary copy, men who write out of the fullness of their experience articles which are not mere guesses at truth, but truth which has been tested by actual practice. The subscriber must subscribe, the advertiser advertise and the writer write. They must all co-operate to the accomplishment of the worthy purpose of making the great poultry industry still greater and the respected name of poultryman more respected. We have reason to be proud, not only of the large number of our subscribers and the liberal patronage of our advertisers, but also, of the splendid corps of our contributors and the character of their contributions. They have made this journal truly successful. And credit is due not only to those writers who have won a brilliant name for themselves for contributions which combine the practical matter of experience with the grace of literary form, but also to those younger writers who, have had a message to deliver, and have, perhaps, delivered it with unnecessary trepidation and needless doubts as to its value. Their experiences are just what beginners need to know, and they may be assured that their contributions are not unappreciated by the editor or the readers of this journal.

Indeed, they may have discovered truths which had escaped the experienced observation of their elders and which have helped the veteran as well as the beginner.

As in the past, so in the future, we shall rely upon the assistance of all these classes. "We are in the hands of our friends," and we place ourselves there with confidence born of experience that ours is not a vain trust. But we have our duty to perform and shall strive so to do it that all classes will have, as they deserve, "a square deal." No one class will be favored at the expense of another, but the needs of all will be consulted and met so far as lies in our power. All classes will be favored classes. We wish every reader to look upon this as his journal, to feel that he belongs to the favored class because his needs are anticipated and supplied, and, in the language of the shop-keeper, to ask for what he wants if he does not see it. No one but the editor can know how helpful such inquiries may be made. If it is our aim, as it certainly is, to supply what is wanted, the making known of such needs will better enable us to supply them. Of course, it is possible that all of them can not be met at once, and it is even possible that suggestions may sometimes be so antagonistic that some of them can not be met at all, but the reader may be certain that no suggestion will lack due consideration, and none will be rejected through prejudice or caprice. In the case of antagonistic suggestions some one must decide which shall be accepted and which rejected, and the duty, unpleasant though it be, rests upon the editor. In deciding such questions he has but one desire and purpose, to enhance the value of this journal to all of its patrons, and that desire will always govern his decisions, that purpose will be kept steadily in view. We therefore invite suggestions from our patrons.

After the Shows, What Then?

After the shows are over, what then? The winter is going, will soon be gone, and spring will be here almost before one is aware of it. The planning for the spring campaign can no logner be delayed.

The first thing, after the show season is over, is to go over the matings already made and see if they are satisfactory. If they are not, they should be made satisfactory at once. It may happen that some new birds are needed, and if that be the case this need should be supplied at once. The breeding stock needs to become acquainted with each other and its surroundings before the breeding season opens. If, for any reason, the matings have been delayed, they should be attended to immediately.

Having decided to sell eggs for hatching, it becomes necessary to determine the price at which the eggs will be offered. Eggs vary greatly in value. Some are worth only the current market prices for consumption; others have been sold as high as ten dollars each. Somewhere between these extremes will lie the price each breeder should ask for the eggs he offers for sale. The true price will depend upon various factors, the breed, whether very popular or otherwise, the excellence of the breeding fowls, the prizes won, the reputation of the breeder, and the like. Eggs from a breed having a boom and for which there is a strong demand will obviously bring more money than those from a breed for which the demand is slight. If the breeding fowls are of supreme excellence and properly mated, their eggs are worth much more than eggs from fowls of mediocre quality. Fowls which have won in strong competition are likely to produce other winners and their eggs will sell for more money than those from fowls which have never been shown and whose winning characteristics are unknown. A breeder who has won an enviable reputation for producing stock of a high character is entitled to ask and is likely to receive better prices for eggs for hatching than one whose reputation is yet to be made.

This question settled, it becomes necessary to let the public know what you have for sale, and at what prices. This leads to two important matters, the character of the advertisement and the medium in which it shall appear. The advertisement should be so conceived as to make prominent the variety, the peculiar excellencies of the stock, the reasonable price for the eggs, and lastly where and of whom they may be obtained. The medium in which the advertisement shall appear should be one that has taught its readers to pay good prices for good goods. Some mediums, excellent for other purposes, are practically worthless for the advertising of eggs for hatching, because their readers have not received the education needed. We recall a certain publication of extensive circulation in which some poultry breeders at one time advertised. They had numerous inquiries concerning the stock they offered, but were unable to make any profitable sales. The readers evidently thought that a hen was a hen, "only this and nothing more," and that one dollar was a good round price for Mrs. Biddy and fifty cents a dozen more than her eggs were worth. The medium also, ought to reach a sufficient number of people of the right character, in order for the advertisement to be profitable. The more people of this character which it reaches the better, but it requires no argument to prove that the advertiser is not helped by having his advertisement in a paper, the readers of which are not interested in what he has to sell. Poultry journals are the best mediums in which to advertise poultry, but even among poultry journals there is a choice. A journal whose circulation is among people interested in poultry, which has been built up, not by meretricious means, gift enterprizes, and "yellow" methods, but by a steady, persistent and consistent advocacy of the best in and connected with the poultry industry, and which is sustained by a continuation of such a legitimate and healthful policy; a journal which has educated its readers to pay a fair price for good stock and given them the data from which a fair price may be determined; a journal which is alive and growing steadily, retaining its old subscribers by its helpfulness and attracting new subscribers by its honorable methods; a journal whose chief object is to advance by every honorable means the interests of its patrons and of the industry with which they are connected; a journal like this is one that it is safe to choose as a medium in which to advertise. We are not given to boasting, but the Successful Poultry Journal has such a circulation, obtained and maintained in the manner indicated, and is a live, growing publication devoted to the interests of its patrons and the great poultry industry, and we know, from unsolicited testimonials that it pays its advertisers handsomely. If it pays others, why will it not pay you?

Prevention and Cure of Disease

WHITE COMB, ANAEMIC COMB AND BLACK ROT.

The comb and wattles are so prominent a part of the bird that they early attract attention to such diseases as have comb changes. Some ailments are general, with comb involved, and others are localized in comb and wattles. To this latter class belongs what is usually known as "white comb." This disease is owing to the ravages of a fungus that is similar to barber's itch in man. Favus, or white comb, results from the injury worked by the vegetable germ. This same germ has been found in rabbits and mice.

Favus almost always shows itself first on the comb, spreading to head and wattles, possibly to neck and body. Rarely is it first seen on body or neck. White comb, or favus as it is properly called, is first noticed by the coming of little white spots, about the size of a pencil head. These increase in size; more form and run together, sometimes covering the entire head. Careful examination will show a thin crust, with fine hairs in the center, white or yellow in color. This is dry, itchy to the bird, and excites scratching. Much rubbing or scratching will start the blood to flowing and then dust mixes into the scab, giving a disgusting appearance. With the thick crust is likely to be some odor, of a sickish character.

Favus attacks the hairs of the comb and head. It makes its home on them. It irritates, by its presence, the flesh around the hairs and starts inflammation.

Without treatment the white comb will spread until the entire head is affected. Something must be done to destroy the life of the germs. Access must be had to them in order to do this. Soften all the crusts with a careful oiling with some salad oil, wash with ivory soap-suds. Then work into the irritated parts a mixture of water ten parts, sulphonapthol one part. Have this warm to the touch and reach all affected parts. It may be necessary to do this several times before getting to the seat of every point of infection. Keep diseased and well birds apart.

An anaemic comb appears as the result of general debility. The whole bird is weak, the blood loses its color, and the comb is tinted with yellow, or even white. Careful examination will show no disease of the comb. This condition is found in birds lately ill of serious diseases or stock kept in dark cellars or city back-yards. Lack of food or sunshine will give the light colored comb.

As we feed our birds from meal to meal, there is nothing more noticeable than the condition of the comb. Let any abnormal change in color lead you to more careful examination. This will prevent many a serious outbreak of disease in your yards.

In cases of black rot the comb varies in color from what we know as "standard red" to black. A sluggish liver will give you a comb that is darker than the normal and likely to vary little through the whole day. A valvular heart trouble will give the same color, but it comes and goes with more or less violent exercise. Sluggish circulation of blood makes a dark comb. Stopping of the circulation through the comb will give black rot. It may effect the whole comb or only a part of it, as the points of a Rock's comb. The parts involved are dying. Black rot is "dry" or "moist," according as how it appears in its breaking down. The dead part may divide from the sound, heal over and a deformed comb result. Commonly a bird that has black rot has passed its days of usefulness.

Healthy surroundings, feeding sound grain and meat, are the best preventatives to this trouble. It seldom pays to treat sick birds that have black rot.

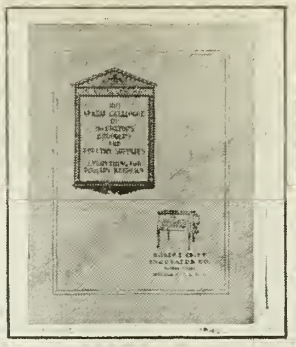
How Some People Make Money Where Others Lose



Incubators and Brooders of Quality

"How Some People Make Money and Are Successful in the Poultry Business Where with Equal Chances Others Lose."

This is the subject of a chapter in our 1911 Catalogue, illustrated herewith. It is written by Mr. Essex himself, and is based on his practical experience of over 20 years. Mr. Essex says: "If I were starting in the business, this chapter contains information I would welcome. It would save me years of time and considerable money."

Our catalogue answers the question, "Which Incubator and Brooder Shall I Buy?" It tells you how the "Essex Models" are made, and why they are made so—why you need no previous experience to operate them successfully—why they hatch better and stronger chicks than any other—what we do to avoid dead chicks in the shell. In fact, it tells you how the Robert Essex Incubator Company has become the leader, by making superior products, by keeping up with the times—securing patents on the latest and best improvements.

The Essex-Model Incubators are used on large, successful poultry farms, by duck growers, by fanciers, and at experiment stations. They hatch alike in the hands of women, beginners and experts. They hatch the largest and strongest chicks, and more of them, because they are built on a principle which conserves the moisture in the eggs.

We make two leading lines of Incubators. Our "Standard" Essex-Model—all chestnut (the only hardwood incubators made); the highest grade incubators built anywhere by anybody; also our Enamelled Rolled Steel "Middle Price" Incubators, which have a chestnut front. They are the most superior of low priced machines.

Here are examples of how users succeed with the "Essex-Model." There is nothing wonderful about these. Just plain, everyday experiences with the best incubator made.

WHAT A FANCIER DID
Hatches Winners the First Time

I am sending you photograph of the cock "Snowball," winner of first prize and Silver Cup for highest scoring bird in the Show, scoring 96½; also of the hen winning first prize, scoring 95¾; and the first prize pullet, scoring 95½. All these winners, including highest scoring cockerel Fort Wayne, Ind., Show, 1910, were hatched in your Incubator. This was my first experience with an incubator. It is easy to operate. A failure would be impossible. I never had better or stronger chicks. Have not lost over 3 per cent. I am so pleased that I will never go back to hatching by hens.

WHAT A FARMER DID
"200 Layers Kept My Family"

Vineeutown, N. J., Aug 13, 1910.

I run an eleven-acre farm, and would you believe it, my 200 layers kept my family of five. This is owing in great part to the use of your incubators. They are reliable, and I have had good success. I have hatched 95 per cent, and raised 90 per cent to maturity. The chicks grow well—they are strong and healthy. The finish of your machine is very fine—it is elegant compared with others. Your thermostat is very accurate. The machine is perfectly self-acting and needs no application of water. ARTHUR STIEBRITZ.

Don't Lose Your Chicks by Poor Brooding

The first few weeks of a chick's life cover the most important period of its existence. Cold brooders and poorly ventilated brooders—brooders that are not built on correct principles—should be avoided. Users of our brooders write us that they mother the chicks better than a hen. In snow—in zero weather—in hot or cold climates—the result is equally satisfactory. The illustrations prove that the Essex-Models are most convenient the greatest labor-saving brooders ever invented. Our Catalogue fully describes and illustrates them, showing the 1911 improvements possessed by no other brooder on the market. They are made in sizes to suit everybody.

OATS FOR YOUNG AND GROWING STOCK.

The simplest and the best mash for growing chicks always comes ready mixed, as ground oats. I do not think there is any food that comes as near fulfilling all the main food requirements of young chicks as do ground oats. I admit right away I'm a crank on oats. I do not remember the time when oats have not formed a large part of my breakfast. As a small boy, carrying papers, I waxed fat on oats. Later, when trying my hand at athletics, they were still the most satisfying food. In the office work, still later, they could not be beaten. And now, on the farm, I still cling wildly to them. They have done so well for me that I was not surprised to find as good results from their use for the chicks.

BLACK LANGSHAN COCKEREL.
"Perfection," valued at $300.00. Winner of first at Illinois state show and gold special for best cockerel in the Asiatic class. Bred and owned by Mrs. H. C. Wilhite, Greenfield, Ill.

There are stages in a chicken's life when if full fed he will demand or turn away from certain grains. Now he won't eat kaffir corn from choice, and then he demands whole corn. Then he demands wheat, and so on. But at no stage in his life, so far as I have been able to discover, will a chicken turn from ground oats or oats in some other form.

Many people have distinct ideas on growing birds. The ideas vary widely, and so as to make things clear I give my own. I want to grow birds symmetrically. That is, birds well filled out and plump at all stages in their lives. Also I want to hold back the laying habits of my early pullets and govern the laying tendencies of all the later ones. Hence I want to feed to accomplish that. I want to do with poultry as a florist does with Easter lilies, say, when he grows them almost to the blossoming point and then puts the plants in a cool house to keep. Just before Easter he turns on the steam and in the consequent heat all the lilies blossom at once. I want my pullets to be close to standard weight before they lay, and my males as nearly so as possible before they discover they are males. In just that way and in about that way I differ from the views of Mr. Edgar Warren in the December S. P. J. And also the food to do this with must be easily digested and assimilated. Understand, in this plan I do not always succeed as regards plumpness or sex development, but in the main I do.

I get success with this plan on ground oats. And I do not mean "chop feed," which is generally oats and corn ground together, but clear oats, ground hulls and all. My idea is that an exclusive corn diet (aside from what is picked up on the free range) produces "stringy" birds, that is, birds with stringy flesh and not of symmetrical development, although they may be fat. Also corn is a great stimulant to the reproductive organs and may mature a bird sexually before he is otherwise half grown physically. Wheat produces a lot of meat which is quite oily, and thus we have the wheat-fed broiler. But wheat has always seemed too heavy a feed for extended periods and not a good bone grower.

On the other hand, oats seem to me to fill the bill in every particular. They are non-stimulating to the reproductive organs, regardless of the popular idea. For that reason when fed alone they will grow a bird up to 5 to 5½ pounds without producing a consequent sexual development. They grow both bone and flesh and in the latter case produce a white, juicy meat quite up to the qualities of the best milk-fed bird. They put little tax on the digestive apparatus and above all else an oat-fed bird never lacks feathers.

Consequently my plan has always been to grow my birds on oats, and shortly before I desire them to lay, feed plentifully on whole corn. So far as I can discover the sexual stimulant is in the corn germ, which is not present in the cracked corn. And being well matured other ways, the birds respond quickly to this corn diet. Further, the tendency of early pullets to lay, get broody and then molt can thus be almost completely governed and eliminated.

Having started my baby chicks on a grain diet with rolled oats, and later an addition of chick feed, the little things have a well developed liking for oats when they get their first dish of ground oats. These are placed in a shallow dish or saucer so that they can get in it and scratch. That scratching may sound wasteful, but I like it for two reasons. One is that no dish would accommodate all the chicks at once and the other is that any little chick on the outskirts of the crowd, having runt tendencies in his mind, has his particles of oats thrown out to him. And frequently the foxy little innocent by-stander gets the most oats.

As the chicks become older the oats are put in shallow hoppers or boxes with slatted tops.

About the time the oats go in the hoppers I start feeding a mash of one-half sifted ground oats (I use mosquito wire for sifting), one-quarter sifted beef scrap and one-quarter corn meal. In a few days I add one part of wheat middlings. It is quite difficult to give a formula because I judge of the chick's needs by his appearance, knowing also his age and what he has eaten previously. Eventually I come to two parts sifted ground oats, two parts sifted beef scrap, one part corn meal and one part wheat middlings. Later one part of bran is also added, and still later say at three months or so, I begin to work around to the winter laying mash.

But throughout the growing period of the bird's life, till he is four or five months old, I keep ground oats constantly before him. Of course, the chicks only eat the meats and the balance is thrown in for the old stock to scratch over.

On this system, if you choose to call it that, or on oats, if you call it that, I can and have grown pairs of March hatched roasters that sold July 1st for $5.00 per pair. The price then is always 40 cents per pound, which makes the weight around 13 pounds for the pair. I have certain customers from whom I have standing orders for pairs for July 4th.

But the question may arise, "Is this a cheap feed?"

To that I can return no answer in figures. If I am to have birds I want well grown ones. And I'm a believer in the full dinner pail. There are certain things I take for granted, leaving costs to the final results. You can't say, when selling a broiler, "There comes 50% profit," and also when housing laying stock, "There goes a pullet which has cost me nothing so far." As I see it, the broilers practically pay for the laying pullets. I figure my profit on the eggs and dressed fowl. The egg costs I have to figure out, but the fowl is all velvet.

And to my mind it's oats that does it.

Women's Department

Woman in the poultry yard has her own problems and her own perplexities. In a general sense they are the same as confront our brethren in the same industry, but in numberless directions we have our own particular obstacles to overcome. Women and men do not set about many things in the same way. A man has muscle and physical strength, while a woman—unless she can call masculine hands to her aid, must use her brains and ingenuity to meet the exigencies of the varying seasons. If she has not so much physical strength, she has other qualifications for the work which put her at least on a par with the "lords of creation." Her innate motherliness, her patient attention to details, her quick intuition—all these fit her especially for poultry work.

We all know there is heavy work connected with successful poultry keeping. Houses will get out of repair; fences with innate depravity insist on becoming demoralized, proving insecure barriers against enterprising, inquisitive fowls. Coveted conveniences require skilled hands for construction. What is a woman to do when by force of untoward circumstances, she finds herself without the aid of masculine hands? Shall she confess defeat, and quit the keeping of her feathered family?

Poultry keeping seems to be largely relegated to the women. Line up all who care for fowls from ocean to ocean, and petticoats would be in an almost overwhelming majority. Some of these are "bachelor women," standing alone in a mighty sense of strength and independence. A majority are "house mothers," with many other duties to fill brain and hands. The problem of getting the work done which requires a man's strength and mechanical skill when there is no man available, confronts many a woman.

It is interesting to note how such a vital difficulty has been triumphed over in multitudes of cases. When a woman's ingenuity attacks a problem of this sort, you may be sure she will reach some solution. I have in mind a woman who is not strong, neither have her hands ever been accustomed to the use of hammer and saw. Owing to rheumatism, her husband, who had always helped her in the heavy work of the poultry yard, was rendered unable to give his usual assistance. One house, built last spring for two pens of choice White Wyandottes, not at all adapted for winter use, had to answer for this winter. The lumber had shrunk under the heat of summer, leaving great cracks. She was physically unable to batten the house, and there was no one to call upon. The hired man had more than he could do to keep his own work done.

Part of a roll of building paper was found, which she used for lining the house. She learned how to drive nails, and put up boards where they were absolutely needed. The openings used for windows she covered with a heavy grade of unbleached cotton cloth, and above them she nailed old carpet, putting in nails so that it could be hung out of the way when moderate weather prevailed. She had read much of the curtain front houses, and was glad to try the plan on this tiny scale.

Over the paper she whitewashed the interior, sprinkled Zenoleum as a disinfectant and purifier, scattered straw on the clean earth floor, and felt proud of her achievement.

This same woman has long wanted a lamp arrangement in her large poultry house to keep the water from freezing in cold weather. Not being able to compass her desire, she hit upon the plan of using granite, iron or metal vessels for water, taking care to empty them at night, and filling them several times during the day with water moderately warmed. Should they freeze, they were easily thawed out on the stove, which is impossible with a wooden trough, or large utensil.

If a bright ingenious woman comes up pat against an apparently insurmountable difficulty, confronting her like a high stone wall, she will very likely find a hole beneath to crawl through, or a way around it. Brains sometimes count for nearly as much as muscle, and I regard it as a signal victory when one of the sisterhood proves herself mistress of a difficult situation. We can often foresee a coming difficulty, and being forewarned is to be forearmed. If all poultry women took especial pride in learning to drive a nail with precision, and saw a board in two as quickly and deftly as their brothers or husbands can do it, they will have solved in advance many phases of the poultry problem.

There are cases, of course, when the aid of masculine muscle and skill must be invoked. Not many women are strong enough to build poultry houses, although I am sure many could do it if strength was equal to their adaptability. But when the houses are ready to our hand, and the hammer and saw have played their part, there remains enough to prove our mettle and ability.

So, let us prove ourselves true and worthy queens in our feathered domain. Discouragements and difficulties are sure to come, but with undaunted courage, let us press on toward the longed for goal of success. There is no use in being disheartened because our pathway is hedged about with perplexities, and things seem to be going against us. Those who can wrest victory from impending defeat are the winners every time.

You would be surprised to know, that in addition to winning year after year, birds purchased from me or hatched from eggs I sold, have won at the largest shows in the country. I could mention show after show, where my birds have won the BEST PRIZES, but I honestly believe this honor belongs to the purchaser. So, when you buy birds from me you need not be afraid that I will publish your winnings as mine. For the season of 1911, I have mated 15 grand pens. If you want to raise big snow white beauties that will win in the show room and fill the egg basket, let me send you some eggs from my choice pens.

Write for mating list, which describes my pens and contains a picture of "LEADER" my 1st Chicago cockerel and other famous birds. A choice lot of breeding cockerels left at from $3.00 to $10.00 each.

Incubators & Brooders

Most people think that everybody knows how to raise poultry, just get the old hen and "rooster" and they will do the rest, which is all quite true. In our boyhood days it used to be one old hen with her one chick running here, while another old hen with a dozen or more would run there; if they all lived or all died it made little difference, for there were other old hens with their chicks here and there, and when fall came there was a nice bunch of young stock, plenty for breeding the next year as well as to lay the eggs, and a few for market. What more could any one want?

There was a time when people did not seem to want anything better, but that day has passed. It matters not how many hens one may have or how good luck they may have with them or if they are raising them for market, for layers or breeders, they want more chicks than the old hen with her small brood will produce, and, even if the old hen would produce the desired number, there would not enough of them get the sitting fever early enough in the year. The valuable bird is the early bird; yes, it's the "early bird that catches the worm."

To keep up with the times it is absolutely necessary to hatch at least part of your chicks artificially; in fact, nearly all real poultry breeders, I care not what line they are breeding, rely almost entirely on the incubator.

The kind of incubator to use depends somewhat on the kind of poultry you are breeding; but, while some make the mistake of getting one too small to start with, many more make the mistake of getting them too large for best results, for, if one is breeding especially for the very best stock, it is practically impossible to get thousands of eggs from the very best hens all at the same time. One hundred good eggs from the very best stock is secured much more easily.

Starting the incubator is very important. The time to start it is as early in the year as you have good eggs to start it with; perhaps no one could start the new year better than setting the eggs into the machine.

Where to set the machine has bothered more people possibly than anything else. A good incubator cellar is all right, but many want to hatch a lot of chicks and yet do not want to go to the bother or expense to build a building especially for hatching chicks. Any room will do, yet many rooms have proven largely a failure.

A good cellar is the best place, but a poor cellar might be the very worst. In many houses a very handy place to run a few machines is overhead in the cellarway. There, often, four or more machines may be placed so the first one is handled right from the main floor, while the last one can be cared for without going half-way down the stairs; all can be watched at the same time and hundreds of chicks hatched the same day right overhead in the stairway out of everybody's way.

Don't think that because it is an incubator any old egg will do, but place in a good machine nothing but the very best eggs that you are able to get, and don't put the eggs in until the machine is thoroughly cleansed and disinfected if it is an old machine.

HILDORFER'S BLACK MINORCA FARM

Jos. P. Hildorfer, Prop. Saxonburg, Butler Co., Pa.

Remember, this is very important. Possibly millions of chicks have come to life in an incubator, only to die young on account of neglecting to clean and disinfect the machine.

After the chicks are hatched it is very necessary to have a good brooder. There are many kinds of good brooders, some fireless and many with artificial heat. The kind to use depends largely on the time of year and general conditions. Some people would have good success with one kind, while other people would have better luck with another kind.

But the greatest mistake in the life of the chick is made by people thinking that any old box will do for a brooder to brood chicks in, and thousands and thousands lose their life every season on account of this carelessness alone. If you really want to raise chicks and have them grow up strong and healthy, get the very best brooder you can get, but the highest priced one may not always be the best one. Sometimes a cheap, home-made brooder can be made to do the work satisfactorily.

A brooder built along the lines of the real hen house is a good plan; that is, have the three sides tight and have an abundance of fresh air and sunshine come in from the one side. It does away with the danger of drafts, and sunshine brings good health.

By all means get a brooder that can not only be well aired and easily exposed to the sunlight, but have one that can be easily and thoroughly cleaned, and keep it clean, for cleanliness itself is almost life its very self to the chick.

Many think that during the first few weeks a certain number of incubator chicks will die, and after the chicks get a few weeks old practically all that live to that age will live. Now, there may be some foundation for that way of thinking, because it is often true that the few that are strong enough to pull through with all they have to contend with the first few weeks of their life are too strong to be killed in any way, but don't get the idea that a lot of incubator chicks must die. Remember that every time a little chick dies, there is a cause. Discover the cause, and as soon as the cause is removed the deaths will stop. After the chicks gets a few weeks old they are not proof against death, and without the proper care will occasionally die. Continue to discover the causes and avoid the deaths.

An outdoor brooder does very well set outdoors any old place, yet, generally, in the case of an indoor brooder, protected at least a little by a shed or something, better results will be obtained. Perhaps there is no better place to set a brooder than in the runs of a greenhouse. I will admit that possibly very few are fortunate enough to have a greenhouse at their disposal, yet it is not at all an expensive proposition to make a temporary windbreak on the north and a lot of old sash on the south that will do nicely to raise thousands of chicks, but it matters not how nice a greenhouse or other building you may have, do not make the mistake of keeping the chicks housed up. Let the doors wide open and let them run out, especially all nice days, even if there is snow on the ground. Let them scamper out to the fresh air and then run back into well protected quarters, and they will get good exercise and be active, healthy and happy.

After the chicks outgrow their little brooder it is very necessary for them to have some good place to spend their time before they are grown and ready for their real hen house, and for that period in life there is nothing, to my mind, equal to a good little colony house, just big enough to accommodate the desired number without too much crowding. The great secret in raising good, healthy chicks is to always have a good place to put them in and not let them get crowded up too much. When they get crowded in their quarters have a good, fresh, clean place, plenty large for them to grow, and change them from place to place as they grow, and when they get grown and get in a good, fresh-air hen house, with plenty of litter on the floor to keep them dry and warm and give them plenty of exercise, they will not only be contented and happy, but you will be, too, when you gather your daily supply of eggs.

With a variety of grain food, a little ground bone just fresh from the meat shop and plenty of cut clover and fresh water, the hens will not only feel like laying the egg basket full but the eggs will be fertile and hatch good, healthy chicks which will grow to maturity and make good, strong, healthy, profitable birds.

THE USE OF THE HEATLESS BROODER.

The heatless brooder was not my discovery. In fact it seems to have taken me inordinately long to discover there was such a thing. About a year ago Prof. Morse and I had an argument in the S. P. J. about certain kinds of poultry houses. Although I had used open front houses for mature stock for many years, never till I had that argument had I the gumption to try to get away from heated houses or brooders for chicks. Last year I tried, for the first time, the heatless brooder. To say I was astounded by them is putting it mildly.

I shall not attempt here to give any figures as to results covering the entire season, because I very much doubt whether such figures would be believed. But I can say, and my experience proves it, that the heatless brooder last year practically eliminated all loss of chicks.

As a sample of the season's figures I will say that out of one hatch of 326 chicks, I put two lots of 15 chicks each under two hens whose "mother" characteristics I had proven in previous years, and put the balance of the hatch in heatless brooders, 30 to a brooder. I gave all chicks every care I knew and was especially careful of the hens and chicks. Some of the brooders were placed in a heatless, glass-fronted brooder-shed, and some in a vacant pen in an open-front laying house. Out of that hatch I lost two chicks from one hen, three from another, and one each from two heatless brooders in the glass-fronted house. Of those in the open-front laying house none was lost. The chicks were hatched on April 2nd, I believe, and at that time here the season is about one month behind, say northern Illinois.

I am now firmly convinced that the heatless brooder is the thing to use. I don't think my experience was a chance one. Whether these brooders will work best in open-front houses at all times, I am not prepared to say. It seems, honestly, to be too heroic treatment, but I shall, nevertheless, continue to try the experiment. I will add, too, that I have no heated brooders which can be used now.

I have seen the theory advanced that even given a perfectly heated brooder, losses would still continue in it owing to the impossibility of thoroughly disinfecting it from brood to brood or season to season. The heatless brooder I used was destroyed after using once, and each lot had a fresh new brooder to start with, which, in view of the above theory, may account for part of my good fortune. But I do not believe that is all there is to it or even the major part.

Heatless brooders such as I used do, however, require more constant care for the first few days. It is more work to accustom the chicks to them. After that, though, they require about 75% less care.

Also I got the best results by changing the bedding in them every noon. This had been advised every other day, but every day seemed necessary to prevent dampness.

HENS AND HEALTH.

A little story came to me recently of how a city man saved doctor's bill and made a profit on hens. It is a short story, but it is full of suggestions, and is here given in the narrator's own words, as nearly as possible.

"A number of years ago my wife was in poor health; ailing all the time and doctoring all the time. I was in to see the doctor one day and he said to me: 'I can't do your wife any good with medicine. What she needs is to get outdoors and have something to do outdoors. Get her a flock of hens and let her take care of them.'

"Well, I bought a hen for 25 cents and a setting of eggs for 17 cents, and she began. She got interested in those chickens and got outdoors more, and we have kept hens ever since.

"I kept an account of all the feed bought and of the eggs laid. I charged her with the cost of the feed and gave her credit for the eggs at the price the grocers paid. I kept this up for three years. At the end of that

THREE KINDS OF SCRATCHING SHEDS.

My predecessor on the farm had a gable roof hen house 8x20 feet. The south half had perches and nest boxes and was lighted by 16 panes of glass, 8x11 inches, in the south end. The north half was a scratching shed with slats on both east and west sides, which permitted the breezes to circulate freely and snow to drift in. I got along with it thus one winter or more. Then I boarded up the sides and put a window in the east side. This did very well as a scratching shed for a small flock. Afterward I built a scratching shed adjoining the north end of the hen house 10x20 feet, extending past the hen house 13 feet to the east, with a slatted door and poultry netting on the south side. For one winter it seemed just the thing, but the next winter being very severe, and having lined one roosting room with building paper, the change to the scratching shed on cold days resulted in some frosted combs.

Next I put an 18-inch board on top of the narrow one at the bottom of the netting to break the wind. Later, I hung a curtain inside to let down on windy or stormy days. And finally, last fall, I put window sashes in front of the netting to keep out wind and storm entirely. But I notice that the hens will huddle in an open door in the direct rays of the sun rather than behind the glass.

About four years ago I built a lean-to scratching shed on the west side of the hen house, 6x16 feet, open to the south. A tight board fence diagonally in front breaks the wind, and the lower half of the south end is also boarded, with netting above. It is light enough, warm enough, no trouble with wind and very little with snow. One winter I put roosts in the north end, and with a curtain with an opening in the lower corner in front of the roosts I kept fowls in it day and night all winter.

It protects the hen house on the west, making it warmer than without the shed. One slide door opens into the laying room and one into the roosting room. If I were to build anew I think I would retain these features of this scratching shed: narrow and long, open to south with windbreak near, hinged board on one side to throw out old litter, hen house adjoining, preferably on east side, so that it might be lighted from the east and south, and, in addition, a window in the north end of the shed so that the hens will not all scratch toward one end when searching for grain and kick the litter into a pile in the other end.

A two-flock hen house might have a scratching shed on each side—east and west. E. E. Whitney.

yourself with some of that particular breed's good and bad points. Too many buyers become dissatisfied and are sorry they didn't get another kind or breed of fowls or eggs. I have had several turn me down on orders placed, maybe two or more months beforehand. After I had refused to place other names on my order book, thinking the eggs for that week or day were already sold, a card or letter turns up stating that another breed had been decided upon.

Before placing an order look over and consider more than one advertisement. Those who are nearest to you will often prove the most profitable to buy from, but not always. There has been much said about spasmodic advertising by all editors of poultry journals, so I'll leave that for the reader's conclusion, with the exception of one thought, and that is, one who has something worth advertising isn't afraid, nor too stingy, to put extra money into it.

After deciding on the breed you want and the person or persons from whom you will buy, decide on how much you want to put into eggs or fowls, and tell the seller in your first letter how much you decide on. This allows the seller ample room for the consideration of your order and will often result in your favor. After getting an answer to this inquiry, which will no doubt state the price, etc., let him know by return mail whether you want his goods or not; also state when and where you want them sent, being sure that you sign your name, town and state plainly. There are thousands of letters mailed every day, not only by poultry people, but in all walks of life, in which the name of the sender can't be made out by another, and the result is, answers to them are often missent, just because the one who answered them had to do so much guessing about it. I received a letter not long ago, and the sender was a large business man, too; if it hadn't been for the postoffice box number, I couldn't have answered it. By all means sign your name plainly. It saves time and trouble; at the same time, insures a reply.

Now that the seller has your order and money, get ready to receive what you buy. If it be fowls, have the yards clean, the house, too, and well arranged. On the other hand, if you sent for eggs, be ready to take care of them. Don't go about it in a "hit-miss" kind of a way. Who can honestly blame the seller when the other party fails to do as he is told to do? Suppose you bought fowls and they are not as described. Don't abuse the seller in your first letter; tell him what you have to say in a candid manner, and if he is an honest fellow the matter will be righted at once the same as if it were eggs you purchased, but if you scold and threaten no doubt your letter would find its way to the waste basket.

If I were a peacemaker between two persons as outlined above, I would advise the buyer not to expect too much for his money. Of course, sellers do misuse their customers sometimes, but there are many honest people who are selling eggs and poultry and who would rather give away a setting of eggs or the price of a fowl than secure a dissatisfied customer.

If you buy eggs pay a fair price for them. When eggs are selling in the open markets during the hatching season for from 30 to 60 cents per dozen, don't expect some one to pen the fowls, attend to their many wants, pay postage, buy shipping boxes or baskets, pay a dozen other expenses and then sell them to you for hatching for just a few cents above the home prices. It requires a goodly sum of money to fit up a poultry plant, buy "full blooded" stock to stock it with, and the many other minor things connected with the business. Therefore, you should not expect to get stock and eggs from such breeders at the prices you would pay for stuff from a scrub flock.

FIRST PRIZE PEN S·C·W· ORPINGTONS AT MADISON SQ. GARDEN
Wm. COOK & SONS SCOTCH PLAINS N. J.
OWNERS AND BREEDERS.

A PEN OF COOK & SONS' WHITE ORPINGTON WINNERS.

The birds portrayed above are one of the first prize pens of birds which have been exhibited at Madison Square Garden, New York, by Wm. Cook & Sons, Box S, Scotch Plains, N. J., who are the originators of all the varieties of Orpingtons. They have several thousand birds for sale and also eggs from their hundreds of prize winners. Their ad appears on inside back cover of this issue of Successful Poultry Journal.

A GREAT BOOK FREE. IT SHOWS HOW TO BUILD YOUR OWN INCUBATOR.

This book was prepared at an expense of thousands of dollars by H. M. Sheer, of Quincy, Ill. It has absolutely no strings tied to it. Any one can write for it and get it free and not be obligated for one red penny. Mr. Sheer is a progressive man, one who has been in the poultry business for a great many years and it was his idea to give the whole business one great big boost by publishing this magnificent book.

Think of it! Eighty thousand people have profited from the knowledge they have gained from this book. Eighty thousand people have got the right kind of mechanical parts, and, for the most part, built with their own hands their own incubators at a very sensible cost, and in this way become experts in the workings of incubators and the correct way in which to operate them. Eighty thousand people, strong, young and old, vigorous and prosperous, delighted and thankful, have expressed the great pleasure and satisfaction they have felt in playing their parts in this great incubator uplift.

The big free book is a delightful book to look through. It is full of illustrations —pictures of fine mechanical parts with complete descriptions, of the different steps in putting incubators together with detailed directions, so there is no guesswork, and many interesting photographs of some of the 80,000 men, women and children who have become so happy because they have been able to do as the instructive incubator book tells them.

So great has been the success made by this book that many more thousands are going to get it this year and make their own incubators—the kind which are guaranteed to hatch every fertile egg. Write for a copy to H. M. Sheer, Dept. 14, Quincy, Ill.

THE SIBLEY MATING LIST.

The 1911 mating list of Irving A. and Frank Churchill Sibley, Box B, 1032 Jefferson Blvd., South Bend, Ind., should be in the hands of every reader of S. P. J. who intends purchasing R. C. Rhode Island Reds or eggs for hatching. These breeders claim to be absolute leaders with this variety and there are many people who concede it without question. The firm certainly has overwhelmingly downed all competition many times at some of America's largest shows and they could not do this year after year if they did not have quality in their flocks.

BIG INCUBATOR MANUFACTURER SELLS DIRECT TO USERS.

This ought to be a big year for poultry raisers. Not only are prices high and the demand good—but the initial expense of starting in this profitable line has been greatly reduced and the chances for success greatly increased by a recent move of one of the big incubator and brooder manufacturers.

Mr. J. S. Gilcrest, president and general manager of the Des Moines Incubator Company, for good and sufficient reasons, as he states in his advertising which is now appearing in this paper, has this year decided to do away with the expense of traveling salesmen and jobbers and is selling his well known line of Successful Incubators and Brooders direct to users at real factory prices.

To realize the importance of this step to poultry raisers, one must remember that the Successful line has been on the market for over 16 years. Successful Incubators and Brooders are proved money makers.

Mr. Gilcrest has such faith that poultry raisers will be quick to take advantage of this opportunity that he has largely increased his facilities and in this way he has still further been able to reduce the price on his machines.

In order to explain fully his reasons for changing his plan of selling, Mr. Gilcrest has published a book telling some inside facts about the incubator business and containing a vast amount of valuable information for poultry raisers which he wants to send free to every reader of this paper. If you want one, write direct to the Des Moines Incubator Company, 499 Second St., Des Moines, Ia.

THE ROBERT ESSEX INCUBATOR CO.

Readers of S. P. J. who want to investigate thoroughly before spending their money for an incubator, brooder or poultry supplies will make a mistake if they place their orders without procuring a copy of the 1911 catalogue of the Robert Essex Incubator Co., 29 Henry St., Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Essex, the head of the company, is too well known to the poultry public to need any introduction here. His name stands for honor and fair dealing and the products of his factory represent the highest quality that can be produced. The catalogue we refer to is replete with information that is vital to al poultry keepers and all they need to do to get a copy is to simply send their name to the company at the above address and ask for a copy of the book. It will put you right on the question of buying an incubator and brooder.

WILHITE LANGSHANS AGAIN WINNERS.

Mrs. H. C. Wilhite, Greenfield, refused $300 for her Perfection Black Langshan cockerel, winner of first at the Illinois State Show this season. He will head her best breeding pen this season. He won the three grand trophy cups. "Green Boy," her $500 cock bird cleaned up all competition in the cock class at the above show. She made no entries in the pen class nor in the yard display. She has 30 cockerels and 100 females now for sale that will breed winners for customers. She has furnished many first prize winners for the big shows all over the United States in the hands of her customers.

THE RIPLEY SHIPPING BOXES FOR CHICKS AND EGGS.

How to ship day-old chicks and eggs without loss is a problem to many breeders. Wooden boxes add to the express charges and baskets if not properly packed and unusual care taken are often crushed. The better methods a breeder uses for the shipment of eggs and chicks, the better pleased his customers will be. The Ripley Mfg. Co., Box O33, Grafton, Ill., seem to have solved the problem of perfect shipping boxes for chicks and eggs. They make a full line of chick boxes in 25, 50 and 100 sizes. They also make a line of boxes for shipping eggs that contain 15, 30, 50 and 100. The illustration herewith shows the style of these boxes. They are made of strong corrugated cardboard paper, and have dead air cells to keep out the heat and cold. They are so strong that they will stand the weight of five men, without crushing. We have just received a fine catalogue from the above firm which is full of recommendations from some of the best breeders in the United States who say Ripley's Perfect Boxes are well named. If you have any eggs or chicks to ship be sure to write the above firm or order direct from their advertisement in this issue of Successful Poultry Journal.

SPECIAL FEATURES OF THE CYCLE HATCHER.

The Cycle Hatcher Co., 206 Clover St., Elmira, N. Y., make some strong claims for their incubator and for the benefit of Successful Poultry Journal readers we herewith print some of the merits of these machines. Mr. Philo writes us as follows: "Expense of operation is a matter of great importance. One gallon of oil will run the 'Cycle' hatcher three weeks, while the box type machine would require from two to three gallons of oil to hatch the same number of eggs; and a complete hatch can be run in warm weather with two quarts of oil. With strong, fertile germs, when well started to incubate, nearly heat enough will be furnished by them to complete the work of incubation.

"We are living in a progressive age; the box type of incubator was a step in advance of the hen, and the 'Cycle' discovery is a long step in advance over all other incubators. If we are to succeed in the twentieth century we must keep up with the procession, and discard old ideas for new discoveries that are brought about by scientific experiments, and thus do better work at less cost.

"The 'Cycle' Hatcher only weighs 12 pounds complete, yet all the essentials for a successful hatcher are more fully covered than by any other incubator on the market.

"The eggs are protected from varying outward temperature, by metal, air-space and asbestos felt. There is nothing cheap about the Cycle Hatchers and Brooder-Hatchers. While simple in appearance as well as in fact, careful details in construction are necessary to bring about proper conditions and only high grade materials are used.

A 50-EGG CYCLE HATCHER.
An all fire-proof machine selling for $6.

The outer wall of the Hatcher is composed of three air spaces, and two thicknesses of asbestos felt and when the heater is in place, the outer rim of which is imbedded in soft cotton, cold air is prevented from entering the Hatcher. The lamp is placed directly in the center of the machine, and yet is is impossible for any fumes from it to enter the egg chamber. The moisture question never enters the operator's head from start to finish. The eggs are not dried down as in all other incubators, and larger and stronger chickens are the result.

"In our first experiments we were surprised to see the size and strength of the chickens hatched in the 'Cycle' as compared with those hatched in other incubators.

"It is very discouraging to find fully developed chicks dead in the shell for want of fresh air. When they get to this point in the 'Cycle' they come out to gladden the heart of the operator and make the poultry business a pleasure and a source of profit."

THE USE OF ZENOLEUM IN INCUBATORS.

In a series of experiments conducted by Prof. W. R. Graham, poultry expert for the Ontario Government at the Guelph Agricultural College, reported in Bulletin No. 151, the professor, referring to results as given in tabulated form, says:

"We have succeeded in hatching chickens that grow and live well, by washing the machine with a ten per cent solution of Zenoleum before putting in the eggs, i. e., after the machine is heated to the required temperature, the machine is washed all over the inside, including egg tray and everything. Do not be afraid of using too much of the mixture; if it stands in pools in the bottom of the machine no harm wil be done.

"Zenoleum was used as a disinfectant in a test alongside of mercuric chloride. The results were that the chicks from the machine washed with the tarry compound lived, while most of the others died."

In the incubator hatches where Zenoleum and water was used to supply moisture, 44 per cent of the eggs were represented by live chicks at the end of four weeks. By the use of whole milk and Zenoleum to supply moisture, 45.5 per cent of the eggs set were represented by live chicks at the end of four weeks, or only 3.2 per cent less than from the eggs placed under the hens in roomy nests, and nearly 2 per cent more than from those placed in the crowded nests, as under ordinary conditions. Where water alone was used to supply moisture only 32.7 per cent of the eggs were represented by live chicks at the end of four weeks, or nearly 12 per cent, or one-third less than when Zenoleum was added to the water, certainly a great tribute to its value in the incubator. With a dry egg chamber and no disinfectant only 16 per cent of the eggs were represented by live chicks at the end of four weeks. The results of several experiments made at the Ontario Station are given in an interesting circular which may be obtained free by writing to the Zenner Disinfectant Co., 203 LaFayette Ave., Detroit, for information. The company also has two interesting books on success with poultry which they send free to all applicants.

DOUBLE QUICK GRAIN SPROUTER

Sprouted oats are the greatest egg food known. For an abundance of eggs as well as for the highest per cent of fertility, there is nothing that equals them. Germinating gaains contain the active Principle of Life, hence they stimulate egg production aud chick growth. As a forcing, yet natural, food there is nothing so good for the growing chicks. Thousands testifiy to the high efficiency of the sprouted grains, but the difficulty has always been in the trouble and muss to sprout them. But this is now easily and quickly done, winter or summer, by the Double Quick Grain Sprouter. Sprouted in 24 hours and 4 to 6 in. high in so many days. Nice piece of furniture. May be used in kitchen, cellar feed house, or any kind of shelter.

Makes 2 to 4 bushels of feed from 1 of grain, the cheap feed secret formerly advertised for $1. Soon pays for itself in the increase egg yield and the feed it grows. The most valuable invention in years for the poultryman. Five minutes or less to take care of it. Sizes from a few hens to 500.

SAMPLE BIG HATCHES.

It is truly remarkable what good work a really good incubator will do. Herewith is shown a picture made from the photograph of a Standard Cyphers Incubator showing what a hatch of 331 White Wyandotte chicks looks like.

Many actual hatches of this size are told of in the 1911 Complete Catalogue and Poultryman's Guide, entitled "Profitable Poultry Raising," published by Cyphers Incubator Company, Buffalo, N. Y., a 212-page book, copy of which will be mailed free to every reader who will mention this paper.

Mrs. C. A. Peabody, Reedsburg, Wis., took 400 eggs in a No. 3 Cyphers Incubator to the Reedsburg Fair, hauling the machine six miles on a lumber wagon and the first day of the fair, August 6, 1910, from 400 tested eggs she hatched 393 chicks, "all very smart—not a cripple in the lot."

Theo. R. Browne, 233 Hinckley Ave., Rockford, Ill., ran five hatches in a No. 3 Standard Cyphers and from 1,586 eggs hatched 1,454 chicks.

C. Fewelling, Petaluma, Cal., throughout the hatching season of 1910 obtained "330 to 371 good, strong, vigorous chicks every hatch" from No. 3 Cyphers Incubators, hatching more than 20,000 "fine, healthy chicks" during the season.

ALLIGATORS AND OSTRICHES.

Both Come Out of Eggs Same as Chicks.

Has it ever occurred to you that chicks and ducklings were not the only products of incubator hatching? There are geese you know, and ostriches and various others of the feathered tribe. One of the curiosities of incubator life is to be found in a photograph in color issued by the Reliable Incubator & Brooder Co., of Quincy, Ill. This picture shows an incubator full of little baby alligators—just hatched. The photograph was taken on the Arkansas Alligator Farm and was accompanied by the following letter:

Hot Springs, Ark.

Reliable Incubator & Brooder Co.,
Quincy, Ill.

Gentlemen: The incubator was received in perfect order. I think your new machines are excellent and well put together. I put it to work a few hours after I received it. I have been hatching alligators with your incubator and I enclose you a photo showing you the success that I am having. I hatched every alligator egg put in the machine in three successive hatches and am well pleased. The last machine I bought from you I shall use for hatching alligators and also chickens. I shall recommend your machine to everybody wanting to purchase. I first got acquainted with your machine when managing a Florida ostrich farm; used it there to hatch ostriches with good result.

Wishing you the success you so well deserve, I remain

Yours very truly,
H. I. Campbell, Mgr.

A word here concering the Reliable Incubator may not be inappropriate. The factory of the Reliable company is located at Quincy, Ill., and is the largest incubator plant in the world. The floor space of this factory reaches the enormous figure of 118,400 square feet. Every modern equipment in the way of labor saving or money saving machinery has been installed. The policy of the Reliable company has been to sell direct from factory to consumer and to specialize on popular priced goods. The special points emphasized by the Reliable company are the following: Built on most scientific principles insuring even temperature and correct ventilation to all parts of the egg chamber alike, and controlling the moisture without artificial aid. Double heating system, saving one-third the oil and supplying more heat. Ventilator always under operator's control. Advantages for using and testing their own machines, afforded by their own monster farm for poultry raising. The "money back if not satisfied" guarantee under which all goods are sold. These points are all well worth the consideration of a prospective buyer.

POULTRY DISEASES AND THEIR REMEDIES.

This is the latest book on this important subject and should be in the hands of every poultry raiser whether he has either a large or small flock of birds. This new book covers every disease known to poultry. It gives the causes, symptoms and treatment of all of them. It tells how to prevent diseases and we all know it is much easier to prevent a disease than it is to cure it.

The book also contains valuable suggestions on mating, feeding, housing, selecting the breeding stock, and how to cure and prevent white diarrhoea in small chicks. This one chapter is worth the price of the book. The price is only 50 cents postpaid. Address all orders to Successful Poultry Journal, Chicago, Ill.

NEEDED ON THE FARM.

A new booklet received from the Carbolineum Wood Preserving Company, 518-520 Prairie St., Milwaukee, Wis., deserves, we believe, the attention of every reader who is not already using the very valuable preparation referred to. It has been on the market for many years and is recommended in highest terms by those who have used it. Thousands of its users have the highest confidence in its virtues, not only for the preservation of wooden structures but as an insecticide and protector from vermin of many descriptions. They would not erect any wooden piazza, gate, fence or anything of the kind exposed to the weather without having it thoroughly treated with Carbolineum; or be without it in their chicken coops where it eradicates chicken lice and mites. We advise our readers to send for the booklet.

HOUSING OF POULTRY BY THE PHILO SYSTEM.

I have had a great many people write to me asking if my testimonial to the merits of the Philo System was genuine. If I had really tried the system and was it all right? My reply to these inquiries was always the same, that I had used the system with great satisfaction and was intending to enlarge my plant along these lines. I have done this until now I have a yard full of Philo coops and a long house of the old style with which I shall carry on a small experimental plant, comparing results.

The matter of proper poultry housing is one that is constantly before the poultry public. It has not been settled in the past because there did not seem to be an ideal way of housing stock for all kinds of weather. The summer poultry house was not suitable for winter and the tightly constructed winter house was not built on right lines for a comfortable summer house. The open front house which might do very well in summer does not seem to fill the bill for winter in all climates. The tight boarded coop does not meet the needs of a cool open house for summer and so it goes with almost every kind of poultry construction.

Now, when the Philo Economy Coop first came to my notice it struck me as being the proper thing, viz., warm in winter and cool in summer, having a muslin top that was protected by a paroid roof from the storm and extreme cold of winter and which could easily be removed to meet the demands for a cool summer house. It certainly appealed to me as an ideal type of house. After considerable investigation I purchased one of these houses from the Philo people and began using it. I housed five of my choice White Wyandotte hens and a male in this first coop. They had been taken from a flock that were not doing themselves proud by egg laying. In a short time these birds housed in the Economy Coop began laying and they laid with a regularity that was remarkable. I recall for one particular stretch that the five laid in as many days 4-5-4-5-5-3-4 and so the record of that coop went. The flock housed in the old continuous house did not have the spirit evidently to get into the contest and so few eggs were laid by them that no record was kept.

The principle that the originator had in mind was a small number of birds in a coop. This of course is a principle that was known, but he went further with it by saying that they might also be kept in a correspondingly small coop. The coop which is but three by six feet will successfully house six birds. I have been keeping five females and a male in each Economy Coop. There is no question but what a few birds in a house will do better than a large number running together.

These houses are "hen size" and not made to be the dwellings of men. They are made of a suitable height for the hen, but will not permit the keeper to enter. All work is done from the outside and this is without doubt an advantage. At the present time I have a long house which I am using for experimental work and find that the dirt and dust which the birds raise is almost unbearable while attending them. I think that I would prefer the discomforts which may come on a rainy day while caring for my birds in the small house from without than brushing through a dusty, dirty coop of the old style. A lady with her long gown will find the new style house preferable to the old. The birds may be attended to very quickly as there is a place for everything. There is a long water trough to be filled, and it is to be found in the same place in every house of this style. There is a hopper for the ground food that may be hopper fed. There is a dropping board that may be removed each day for cleaning. There is the three by three feet space that may be spaded each or every other day. A case of everything in its place and everything handy. It is very easy to care for such a house or for many of them.

During the summer these houses may face the north with the roof hinged on the south side, making a protection from the hot rays of the summer sun. The muslin of the top is entirely or partially removed as you may see fit, and the birds have the whole top of the coop open to the sky, without having the sun burning in on them. During the winter the houses are turned towards the south in order to have what was not desired during the summer—the sun. During the winter months the sun will shine in the coops and give warmth and comfort during the day. Another feature of this turning the houses about face twice a year is that the one side of the coop which has a paroid covered board floor covers in turn the dirt which has been used for the past six months or so and exposes a fresh bit of ground. The side that has been used is spaded up the last thing before turning the coop and the ground well mixed with slaked lime which purifies it thoroughly before it is used again.

Some people may think that so many houses require much more work than with the old way. It does in a measure, but the benefits derived are so much greater in proportion that you are willing to give the extra time for the work. After becoming accustomed to the handling of these houses and caring for the chickens thus housed one person can take care of a large number of them without any trouble. One winter I timed myself in caring for the birds I had thus housed. It would take me about 15 or 20 minutes a day to look after five of these Economy Coops and I presume that if I had hurried to make a record that I could have done it in half the time. There is no more trouble in opening the top of the house and sliding the muslin frame than there is in opening and closing the door leading into a pen of the continuous house style. Without taking a step you can attend to the wants of the birds and close the slide and partially shut the roof top, and away to the next coop. With the continuous house you go here for food, to another place for the water, to another for the eggs, and still another for the cleaning of the dropping board. I really cannot see where there is any labor saved by caring or a lot of birds thus housed in comparison with the few birds in each Economy Coop. This system of housing is well worth trying by every poultryman, for its merits are well founded and the principle is certainly a true one. Rev. E. B. Templer.

NEBRASKA'S QUEEN.

Wickstrum, the incubator man at Lincoln, Neb., whose face and straight business talks have come to be so familiar to our readers, reports lively times about his big Queen incubator factory.

The sales of his latest model machines have opened up in unprecedented fashion. He sends word that they already run considerably over a third of his entire sales of last year. This means something, for it is known that "Queen" is one of the most popular of all the incubators, and that a good many thousand went out last year.

It is evident that poultry people are "catching the spirit." Wickstrum preaches the doctrine of making the poultry business a real business.

He not only preaches the doctrine but he shows the way and makes a most attractive offer to those who want to start up in the "Queen Incubator Way" of making poultry pay.

Wickstrum has an A No. 1 machine in his Queen incubator. Secondly, he is terribly in earnest. Third, he knows what he is talking about. A man heart and soul in the business, who knows the business, and who has a machine that really helps to make it a success, is a good man for poultry people to be in touch with. Mr. Wickstrum is always seeking to widen out his circle of friends. If you are interested in poultry, or likely to become interested, you have an urgent personal invitation to write to him and get on his correspondence list.

The new Queen catalog is the finest one ever gotten out by Mr. Wickstrum. He says it is the "finest incubator catalog ever published." This will be a good time to start an acquaintance. Write him and get your name on his list for the book. He will send it by return mail. Address either Mr. W. personally or the Queen Incubator Co., Box 109, Lincoln, Neb.

THE RAT QUESTION.

Poultry raisers each season suffer losses which, if eliminated, would effect a substantial increase in their profits for the year. One of the greatest losses to contend with is no doubt that incurred by the depredations of rats and mice. Conditions here are hard to meet, as traps seem to be unsatisfactory, and the use of poisons is only a risk of further loss, as they are obviously a source of destruction to poultry and domestic animals as well.

It seems, however, that the solution of this problem has been found by the Pasteur Laboratories of America, whose advertisement appears elsewhere in this issue. They have a virus which is furnished in either bouillon or gelatin form, and which is fed to the rodents on bait. In the course of a few days a mortal and contagious disease develops in the rodents, which rapidly spreads. The disease is characteristic, however, in that it is confined to the rodent family. The virus might well be called the "Ideal Rodent Exterminator," for here is a preparation that affects not only the rats and mice that partake of the bait, but the disease which it gives them is communicated to their companions. It will thus been seen that an extensive area can be cleared of the rodents, and being fatal only to rats and mice, the virus can be used with safety anywhere without endangering other life.

Our readers will find it to their advantage to give this matter their thorough consideration. Full particulars will be furnished on application to either the Chicago office, 325 Dearborn St., or the New York office, 366 West 11th St., of the above mentioned company, if this paper is mentioned.

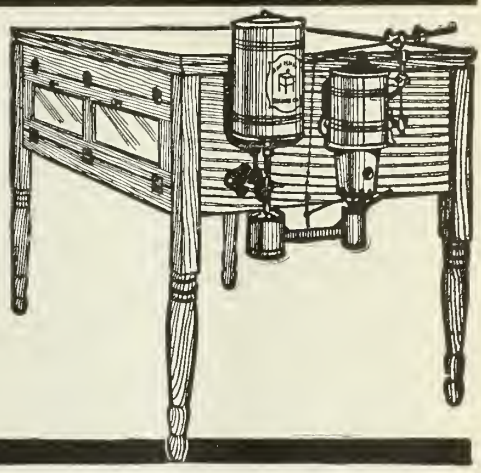
Kitselman Brothers, fence manufacturers, of Muncie, Ind., have just completed their large catalogue of fencing. Their prices are extremely low when you consider the high quality of their fencing. Prices range from 13¼ cents a rod up. See their ad elsewhere in this paper and write them for catalogue.

You Can Build This Incubator Yourself And Save Money



Build Yourself A Money Making Incubator

WITH my plans and my parts you can build the best Incubator in the world. It's as simple as ABC. 80,000 poultry raisers have proven my way best. This great army of successful men and women have found in my plans the best way to get an incubator, and in my exclusive parts the appliances which overcome the imperfections and drawbacks in all other machines. I will gladly tell you about these. I will explain to you my Improved Acme Automatic Lamp—the safest and most economical money can buy. The oil is fed to the wick with my patented automatic air feed, and guarantees a uniform flame always, it seldom needs attention, is not flimsy and rickety. It will not get out of order. I will tell you why my Tandem Double Compound Thermostat has remarkable power, reliable positive action, and is the most sensitive made. By the very nature of its double wafer construction it is twice as powerful and efficient as any other. Its use saves you 25% of your oil bills, cuts out all former regulation trouble, wipes out 50% of the ordinary operating expense. And so it is with all my parts. Everyone of them are exclusive and patented, all are money savers and money getters.

Special! To owners of other makes of Incubators---do not put up with inferior fixtures. My Lamps, Regulators, Burners, Tanks, Heaters, Thermostats and other appliances are adaptable to all makes of Incubators and Brooders. This is good news to thousands who do not want to purchase a brand new Incubator, and yet who realize they can get better results from Sheer's appliances. When making repairs, use Sheer's Lamps, Regulators, etc., and note the great improvement effected. I will supply you with any appliances you need.

A ONE-LAMP, EIGHT APARTMENT INDOOR BROODER.

The above illustration shows what the manufacturers claim to be "the most successful, convenient and economical indoor brooding device" on the market. It is called the Paradise Brooder. This indoor brooder, heated by one lamp, consists of four sections, each section being divided into two brooding apartments with connecting runways.

In other words, this brooder complete has a capacity of 400 chicks in eight separate lots of fifty chicks each—an ideal arrangement, because fifty chicks is the correct number for each flock, where best results are to be obtained.

One lamp or oil stove heats all of the eight separate compartments and the temperature in each apartment can be regulated to meet the needs of the chicks of different ages. Chicks just hatched are placed in the Paradise Brooder and they can be kept in it until they are four to eight weeks old. Users of this brooder report excellent success in raising two-pound broilers at eight weeks old.

The dimensions of the Paradise Brooder are 3 x 7 feet for each section, which allows each separate lot of fifty chicks a space of 18 inches by 7 feet or ten and one-half square feet of floor room. This is more space by considerable than is contained in a brooder 3 x 3 feet in size.

The Paradise Brooder can be bought in one, two, three or four sections. Additional sections can be bought later. One section holds 100 chicks in two lots of 50 chicks each; two sections hold 200 chicks in four lots of 50 chicks each, etc. In this brooder the chicks are up off the floor away from the cold drafts, are protected at all times and under perfect control.

Paradise Brooders are manufactured and sold by Cyphers Incubator Company under broad United States and Canadian patents. This brooder is fully described in the 1911 catalogue of Cyphers Incubator Company, a copy of which book, consisting of 212 pages, will be mailed free, postpaid, to any of our readers who will mention this paper.

Address, Cyphers Incubator Company, Factory and Home Offices, Buffalo, N. Y., or nearest branch house: 23 Barclay St., New York City; 12-14 Canal St., Boston, Mass.; 340-344 North Clark St., Chicago, Ill.; 317-319 S. W. Boulevard, Kansas City, Mo.; 1569 Broadway, Oakland, Cal., or 119-125 Finsbury Pavement, London, England.

A SURE CURE.

The Hancock Inoculatum Co., Box H, Salem, Virginia, have some fine reports from such breeders as C. H. Latham, P. J. Armstrong, U. R. Fishel and A. C. Hawkins, who have used their remedy "Oculum," for roup, colds, bowel and liver trouble with very gratifying results. These breeders handle birds in large numbers and naturally there will be occasional cases of sickness and "Oculum" has demonstrated its value to them over and over again. This remedy has been before the people for several years and its reputation is now fully established. The coming of the hatching and brooding season brings a demand for "Oculum" as it is especially useful in combating that dread disease known as white diarrhea. Readers of Successful Poultry Journal should find out more about this valuable remedy by addressing the manufacturers.

Our readers who are interested in S. C. Brown Leghorns should not fail to write to Geo. W. Kinzie, 308 South Michigan St., South Bend, Ind., for prices on any stock they may need for their pens this season. Mr. Kinzie can also furnish eggs from several pens of high class birds. He has been breeding Brown Leghorns for many years and his birds have won for himself and customers in many strong shows. He breeds for heavy laying qualities as well as exhibition points and he can please all who do business with him.

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 429 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

NEW SYSTEMS AND OLD WAYS IN POULTRY CULTURE.

Observant readers of recent advertising have doubtless noticed the many claims put forward by certain advertisers of new systems for poultry culture which pay enormous profits.

There is no disposition on the part of anyone to dispute these claims. In fact, it is only reasonable to suppose that the steady onward march of wider knowledge regarding poultry culture, as of other things, is bearing its logical fruit in larger result.

But one fact must not be lost sight of. New systems—valuable as they undoubtedly are—do not, necessarily, contain the sum and substance of all poultry knowledge; nor is success entirely dependent on close observance of their teaching. Old ways have brought good profits to hosts of veterans in the poultry business; and it's a safe prediction that they will continue to do so. Old ways are the crystallization of well proven practice and are never based on theory alone.

Take that now popular idea of feeding, originated and practice by Dr. Hess—the giving of a tonic in the soft feed. It has done more to make a nation-wide business of poultry culture than any other one thing. Actual statistics are, of course, not available; but it is within the bounds of probability that egg production in the United States has increased 50 per cent since Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a was placed on the market.

S. C. WHITE LEGHORN.
First prize pullet at Pittsburg, Pa., 1909. Bred and owned by Chas. J. Samuelson, Swissvale, Pa.

Those seeking the reason back of this statement have but to remember that this preparation, by increasing digestion and assimilation, increases the amount of food devoted to egg production.

Once that fact is thoroughly understood, it is a simple matter, indeed, to understand why Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a has built up the poultry business.

Just as a mill, run at high speed and forced with grain, turns out more grist, so the hen, getting all the meal and meat and grain she will eat—and digest—turns out more eggs. Simple, isn't it? and just as reasonable as anything can be.

Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a is said, too, to prevent poultry disease. This seems a reasonable claim, because anything tending to build up bodily vigor, as Pan-a-ce-a does, fortifies against disease to just that extent.

So, taking all the testimony at hand for what it's evidently worth, it seems a fact beyond dispute that Dr. Hess Poultry Pan-a-ce-a is a very good thing for the poultry man, either novice or breeder of long experience, to tie to if he is really out after the best results.

DO YOU STILL PAINT YOUR ROOFS?

Thousands of farmers will count the cost of painting their ready roofings as a necessary part of their annual expense. Many of them are making trouble for themselves in the future by laying roofs which require constant attention.

Amatite Roofing has come upon the market during the last few years and has proven a success. Amatite is like any other ready roofing (sold in rolls with nails and cement free, etc., ready to lay), except that it has a mineral surface which needs no painting.

It is just as easy to lay Amatite as any other roofing and just as cheap. The difference is that after you have laid your Amatite roof, you can leave it alone. The mineral surface is thoroughly durable and requires no painting.

If you do not know about Amatite we advise you to investigate it. You can get a booklet about it and a free sample by simply addressing the nearest office of the Barrett Manufacturing Co., New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, New Orleans, London, Eng.

SUCCESSFUL FEEDING OF POULTRY.

Fowls, like men, need variety of diet. In winter, food that heats the blood is entirely proper; in summer it should be avoided. Middlings in summer may be replaced in part by cornmeal in winter; but too much cornmeal results in unhealthy fattening and it ought always to be mixed with wheat middlings, not given pure.

It is safer to give fattening food to the smaller and lighter hens than to the larger and heavier ones. Avoid too much potato; it is starchy and fattening.

Wheat is the ideal grain food and is practically as cheap as other grains which do not go as far or furnish so much for flesh and eggs. Barley and buckwheat are good eggs producers, but too costly for a regular diet. Never feed anything but sound grain; musty or moldy grain will cause sickness, decrease in egg yield and often death among your most valued fowls.

Where the fowls are but few in number, the scraps from the table will be all they will need in the way of meat; or if they have a wide range they will supply themselves. With a large number of fowls and a comparatively small run, they should have a little liver mixed in their food every third day or so.

Don't try to get along without a bone cutter. Fresh cut bone given twice a week in summer and three times a week in winter, will keep the fowls healthy and add greatly to the egg yield.

The most valuable aid to the production of eggs is Pratt Poultry Regulator. All food is of more value when it is used. It aids digestion—is a safe tonic, gentle stimulant and a wonderful preventive of disease. The most successful poultrymen and professional breeders all over the United States have been using Pratts Poultry Reglator for years and highly recommend it. Free booklet and other information may be obtained by writing to Pratt Food Co., Dept. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.

"I turned 'em in thar to fatten 'em."

"But what do you feed them:

"Nawthin'."

"Won't it be slow work to fatten them on weeds alone. Down our way we shut them up in coops and feed them heavily on corn and wheat. It saves lots of time in fattening them."

"I s'pose it du. But then, what's time tu a chicken?"

Questions Answered

In this department each month questions will be answered that are asked by readers. When writing for information please give all details in full or an an intelligent answer cannot always be given. No portion of your letter will be published if the mere statement of the question will answer the purpose. As there are oftentimes good reasons why inquirers do not wish their identity known, we will not publish names, initials or location. Questions are answered by experts in the various branches of poultry raising. Adress all inquiries to Successful Poultry Journal, 355 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Question.—It is policy for a beginner in the poultry business to confine his efforts to one breed or can he do just as well with two or three?

Answer.—As a general rule, the more experience one has in the poultry business, the more they are convinced that one variety of fowls is all that anyone should attempt to handle and particularly so if the desire is to gain prominence in the poultry world and build up a large profitable business. Nearly all beginners hold ideas just the opposite of these views but time and experience usually brings them around to the one variety idea. There are cases, however, where more than one variety can be successfully bred if all conditions are just right.

Question.—I had a fine White Orpington hen that drooped about for a short time and finally acted as if she had fits. She would throw her head as far back on her back as she could, and at the same time walk backward, almost falling over. This would occur quite often and when she was first affected she seemed to be unable to get her head back to its natural position without help. I would crowd her head back to natural position and it would remain there until she would again throw it back. This she would do many times a day. She could not eat or drink without aid. Can you tell me what the disease is, and what, if any remedy would cure her?

Answer.—It is very difficult to diagnose cases of this kind unless one has an opportunity to examine and handle the bird. You do not describe any other symptoms except those which have a direct bearing upon the condition of the fowl's neck. Sometimes a blow upon the head or other similar injury will affect the brain and produce a form of apoplexy. Birds sometimes have fits of an epileptic nature. The effects and symptoms are same as in people. They may be caused by tumors on the brain and in some cases intestinal worms. Treatment is unsatisfactory, but in mild cases 3 grains of bromide of potash given twice a day is sometimes beneficial.

In rare cases a grain of corn or other such article may become fastened in the upper part of the digestive tract and if the symptoms you mention are the only ones noticeable that is probably the trouble. Raise the tongue and if the obstruction is found remove it. Also examine the throat for an obstruction of some kind.

Question.—I have a lot of Barred Rock pullets three months old, badly afflicted with leg weakness. Will this spoil them for good layers if they recover? Have lost a few of them, but hope to save the rest by feeding plenty of green food, bran and milk, and make them exercise more than they have.

Answer.—If the birds are healthy, of good size for their age and apparently all right in other ways, the attack of leg weakness will not incapacitate them for the breeding pen. If they are weakly stunted specimens or if the leg weakness is caused by wrong methods of feeding, they should not be used as breeders. Birds can be "fed off their feet" with too much rich food and a diseased condition of the liver produced which is manifested in the symptoms you describe.

Question.—What is best to feed when hens have diarrhoea? It is best to cut out mash and just feed grain? They have plenty of grit and their coops are kept clean. Also please let me know the name and address of a good breeder with whom I could exchange some stock for some eggs for hatching. I breed Buff Cochin bantams and White Wyandottes.

Answer. — Some good remedies for checking diarrhoea are as follows: Boiled rice upon which has been sprinkled a little cinnamon, lime water to drink, boiled milk, and dry bran. Medicinal remedies are a half teaspoonful of tannic acid in a tablespoonful of powdered charcoal and mixed with sufficient soft food for about 10 birds, dried cracker or bread crumbs upon which has been sprinkled a little powdered chalk, a teaspoonful of tincture of iron in a quart of drinking water, one-eighth grain of powdered opium and two grains of subnitrate of bismuth every four hours in the most severe cases. In reply to your inquiry relative to exchanging stock and eggs, we can only suggest that you write to advertisers in Successful Poultry Journal.

Question.—Will you kindly tell me the nature of my chickens' sickness and a remedy for the same. They first got eruptions on their combs in the shape of pimples and also on their tongues which extended to their eyes and closed them. The pimples have left their combs and eyes but they have still some yellow spots on their tongues which do not seem to heal with the same treatment that I used on the comb. What is the best remedy for chicken cholera?

Answer.—Your chickens seem to be afflicted with a combination of canker and chicken pox. The throat, nostrils and cleft in the roof of the mouth connecting with the nostrils should be treated two or three times daily by injecting antiseptic solutions into them. Many remedies have been found efficacious and cures have been effected with common coal oil or kerosene, but it is better to dilute it with half sweet oil. Peroxide of hydrogen is perhaps the best. It is cheap and of undoubted merit. Whatever is used should be forced well to the affected parts with a syringe, medicine dropper, or even a small oil can such as used on ordinary sewing machines. The remedy for chicken pox is to annoint parts frequently with carbolated vaseline, removing the crusts as they soften and yield to gentle rubbing. The best remedy for chicken cholera is Douglas Mixture. It is a very strong medicine and is efficacious in cholera and similar diseases. It is made of sulphuric acid one-half ounce and copperas one-half pound in a half gallon of water. It is administered by placing a tablespoonful in the water for a dozen hens daily.

Question.—How many degrees of cold will a single comb bird stand before the comb will be frost bitten? What kind of poultry house has proven the best and most successful in a cold climate where it gets down as low as 20 and 30 degrees below zero; an open front house, or a closed house with artificial heat; or a farm closed house without artificial heat?

Is it best to have scratching sheds separate from nests and roosts where it is impossible to let birds out for weeks at a time on account of snow and cold?

Answer.—No certain degree of temperature can be fixed as the point at which combs will freeze. It all depends upon the length of time the birds are exposed. The interior of the poultry house should never get below zero. Don't try to hug the danger line too closely. Be several degrees on the safe side. All three types of houses have proven satisfactory, but the heated house is not very much so because its effects are bad aside from providing warmth. The most desirable house is a combination of the open front style and the closed house without heat. It is desirable that scratching sheds be separate from the other portion of the house but not absolutely necessary. By being separate, we mean divided with a partition or connected by a covered runway.

Question.—We have 540 Leghorn pullets kept in one flock, in roosting room of 700 sq. ft. and scratching shed of 1900 sq. ft. They laid 30 per cent by December 1, 35 per cent after December 10, and 40 per cent from December 25 until January

THE BEST BOOK ON SUCCESS WITH POULTRY IS

999 QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full.

20. Then they fell off and have since averaged 30 per cent. For the simplification of this question we will assume that their care, feeding, housing and sanitary conditions are nearly correct except that they might do better in smaller flocks. Owing to unavoidable circumstances we had cockerels with them from hatching on. Up to December 15 there were 60, and from December 15 to January 15, 40 males with the pullets. On January 15 they were removed. Can it be that the removal of the cockerels caused the drop in egg production?

Admitting that hens lay better without males (do they?) would it not be possible that since these pens were accustomed to constant attention, the lack of same dulled their productive organs? We still have 20 cockerels in separate quarters. Would you return them to the layers?

We are always ready to accept the experience of others, until we can prove for ourselves. In this case experience seems to say layers do better without males. Nevertheless we cannot quite rid our minds of this theory: That the hen lays in an effort to reproduce her kind. That nature has seen fit to accompany this maternal instinct with a physical desire in all animals. That the fulfillment of this desire would be a reminder, if not an inducement, for the hens to lay.

Answer.—The theory you advance to the effect that the females ought to lay better if male birds are kept with them does seem to be a reasonable one, but in some way it fails to work in practice. There have been many experiments of this character made and there is not sufficient evidence in favor of the theory to give it any foundation worthy of serious consideration. It seems that the season of the year has more influence over the matter than does the presence of male birds, neither has it ever been demonstrated conclusively that the females will lay better without males. Experience seems to teach us that they lay just as well under one condition as the other.

We do not believe that the removal of the cockerels caused the drop in egg production referred to by you. There is nothing to lose, however, by again placing them with the hens, though it is reasonable to assume that the egg production would be heavier from now on, because as the season advances the yield would naturally increase under any and all conditions. We would suggest that in order to satisfy yourself regarding the matter you again place the cockerels in the pen if it is convenient for you to do so and note whether the egg yield is sufficiently increased to justify the belief that the introducing of the male birds has caused it.

Question.—I would like to know what makes my hens lay such small eggs. I have a friend that purchased some of the same pen as I did and we both keep them in the Philo boxes and feed them just the same, go by the directions that Philo gives and his chickens lay much larger eggs than my chickens. They are all young stock and of the Black Orpington breed. Would be pleased if you could tell me the reason for my getting small eggs.

Answer.—If all conditions are equal, as you state, there is no reason for the difference in size of eggs. There is something wrong of which you are not aware. There may be a difference in the age of the birds and yours may not be fully matured.

Question.—What is the import duty on stock and eggs from England?

Answer.—No one is in position to give you as exact information as the express agent in your town. He perhaps has not the detailed information in his office but it is his business to secure it for you from headquarters. Ask him to do so.

Question.—My plans are to build ten poultry houses 12x20x9 ft. to house flocks of 200 each. They will be kept separate by wire fence, with plenty of yard room 100x400 ft. Am I wrong in this notion of size of houses or number of fowls in flock?

Answer.—You are decidedly wrong in your idea of the size of each flock. Fifty birds are plenty for any one house and you should not put more than this number in your 12x20 house if they are to spend much of their time in it. Your yard room need not be as large as you suggest. Half the room would be ample.

ANNOUNCEMENTS of POULTRY SHOWS SPECIALTY CLUBS

BUFF LEGHORN CLUB MEETING.

The annual meeting of the above club was held at the Coliseum, Chicago, Dec. 9, 1910, and was presided over by President F. A. Tecktonius. Several important matters came before the club, and it was decided to offer ribbons to each and every show next season, also a silver set to all shows where four members of good standing will show a full string of Buff Leghorns.

The following officers were elected:

President—F. A. Tecktonius, Racine, Wis.; western vice-president, A. T. Lindgreen, Kingsburg, Cal.; eastern vice-president, J. C. Purderford, Freneau, N. J.; southern vice-president, Joseph Burrows, Desplaines, Ill.; northern vice-president, R. B. Graham, Galt, Ont.

Secretary-Treasurer—Geo. S. Barnes. Battle Creek, Mich.

Executive Committee—W. W. Storms, Racine, Wis.; Thomas Peer, Caldwell, N. J.; Wm. Ewald, Jr., Medina, N. Y.

Sixty-six honorary vice-presidents were also elected from the various states.

TO ALL COLUMBIAN WYANDOTTE BREEDERS.

You no doubt have heard that the two Columbian Wyandotte clubs have gotten together. It is well. The past has been forgotten so we will only dwell on the present and future.

Realizing that the old club's committee could not make any offers other than the one they did, which was not acceptable to us, and further realizing that for the good of the breed all concessions must come from us, therefore putting in practice what we have always maintained, namely, "the good of the breed," we therefore offered to join the old club under their name with the condition that we have the opportunity to go before the breeders and make a fight for our name and emblem. The name we want is the "Columbian Wyandotte Breeders' Association." We ask each and every one to vote for this name and emblem at the next annual election. Now don't forget it as it stands for progress, push and perseverance.

Now as one club let's all lay aside any feeling that we may have had and push! push! push! We have temporarily surrendered our name and emblem, but held fast to our principle. We wish more members would write to Mr. G. F. Eastman, Granby, Mass., for any information regarding Columbian Wyandottes.

Later you will be informed as regards the officers of the quarterly. Now please rub yourself and help. Everybody can do something, so put in your mite. With best wishes for the coming year.

NATIONAL PEKIN DUCK CLUB OF AMERICA.

The above club has recently been organized. The object of the club is to promote interest in the breed, disseminate knowledge as to this greatest of ducks by the encouragement of the showing of this breed of ducks at the various poultry shows throughout America by the publication and sale of any literature bearing upon any phase of this breed and as soon as possible publish a Pekin Duck Standard. And especially to make other parts of the country fully acquainted with the great possibilities of the Pekin duck as a market fowl as used and grown on Long Island, in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. And particularly to raise the ideal type of this bird in the minds of the breeders by showing of the very best birds at the largest shows in this country. And by the giving of liberal premiums and honorary badges to bring out large classes of these ducks at all shows. To show and demonstrate to the world that this is the ideal waterfowl for the farmer, the small breeder and the breeder who raises thousands for the markets of the great cities, and above all to show to the city dwellers that this duck can be grown in confinement and with very little water.

The annual membership dues of this club will be one dollar a year, and anyone interested in this breed may become a member by sending his name and one dollar to the secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Walter Lee Chaney, Warrensburg, Missouri.

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCK CLUB.

The Annual State Meeting of the White Plymouth Rock Club will be held in Indianapolis on Wednesday evening, Feb. 8th, 1911, at the show building. All members are requested to be present at this meeting and make a large exhibit. If we can get an exhibit of one hundred and fifty birds, the cash premiums will amount to about $150, and there will be a number of valuable cups and other specials. The White Rock Club offers a silver cup to be competed for by state members, provided the membership is increased to twenty-five. For full particulars write Guy Daily, state secretary, Jeffersonville, Ind., or Chas. H. Ward, secretary-treasurer, Bethel, Conn.

NEW OFFICERS OF THE AMERICAN CORNISH CLUB.

At the annual meeting of the American Cornish Club held at Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 30, 1910, the following officers were elected: President, R. D. Reider; first vice-president, C. S. Brent; second vice-president, F. C. Burbank; third vice-president, F. C. Price; secretary-treasurer, H. C. Hayes. Members of the executive committee, G. E. Thomas, John D. Mercer.

We are now united with the Pacific Cornish Fowl Club, which brings our membership roll close to 250. We are adding new members every day and we have a snug cash balance in our treasury. We want breeders of all varieties of Cornish to join our club and get our new 1910 catalog free by doing so. The membership fee is only $1.00, which pays one year's dues. Next annual meeting to be at Baltimore, Maryland, January, 1912.

MINORCA BREEDERS—ATTENTION.

The annual meeting of the American Black Minorca Club will be held at Indianapolis, Ind., in connection with the Fanciers' Association of that city. This show date is Feb. 6 to 10, but date of meeting not set yet. A large attendance of club members is desired, as there is considered important business. Every breeder of S. C. Minorcas is urged to send at least a few birds to the Annual Club show, as even a fourth or fifth prize there is worth more than a first or second at the other shows. There will be six silver cups and $160.00 in regular and special prizes. Cups and special prizes are open to club members only, and all breeders who are not members should send $2.00 to Secretary Frank McGrann, Lancaster, Pa., before Feb. 6th. Send to J. C. Melkous, Lebanon, Ind., for catalogue.

Crystal White Orpingtons KELLERSTRASS Strain Exclusively

We now have our pens mated for spring trade. They contain the birds hatched from eggs purchased at $30 per 15 eggs from Kellerstrass Farm the year 1909, and stock raised from these birds from the $30 eggs during 1910. Proof of our claims may be obtained by writing to Kellerstrass Farm. There are blue ribbon winners among our birds that won at the shows we exhibited at during 1909 and 1910, also our good hen Peggy the Second, that won silver cup at the Richland Show 1909, as highest scoring and best shaped bird in show room above all other breeds, scoring 96 3-4. Have 5 pens mated and a fine flock of utility birds, winners among them, at the following prices: Pen 1, at $8 per 15 eggs, only a few to spare from this pen. Pens 2, 3, 4 and 5 at $5 per 15, $9 per 30, $14 per 50, and $26 per 100. Utility eggs $1.50 per 15, $2.75 per 30, $4 per 50, and $7 per 100 eggs. If hatch is not satisfactory will make it right. Order direct from this adv. as we put out no circulars or mating list. A few good cockerels left for sale. They go at $5 each if taken soon. When writing mention this paper. Inoculate Your Fowls Against Disease

The Poultryman's most terrible foes are Cholera, Roup and White Diarrhea. For these are Germ Diseases which breed with frightful rapidity. Inoculation with Oculum is the only sure cure.

Oculum is a wonderful new discovery that cures and prevents disease in fowls in the same way that inoculation gives human beings immunity from dangerous Germ Diseases.

"OCULUM"

Registered Trade Mark

Even the most advanced cases of Cholera, Roup and White Diarrhea have been cured with Oculum. Poultry men say it is successful beyond belief. Thousands of valuable birds are being saved every day by its use.

If you want healthy poultry, turkeys, pigeons, or other fowls, send for a bottle of Oculum and inoculate the whole flock as a preventative.

Recommends Oculum To Brother Fancier

The Hancock Inoculatum Co., Salem, Va.:
Gentlemen: I have given "Oculum" a thorough test and especially on a young cockrel, who had Diarrhea since he was hatched. He was such a beautiful bird I was anxious to save him as a future prize winner, and tried all remedies without avail. Oculum took about three weeks to cure him, but I may say at present writing he has been free from all signs of the disease for four weeks and is entirely cured. Inoculated 200 chicks and all 5 pens of Breeders. I consider it without equal for poultry and I would not be without it at any time. I have recommended it to all my brother fanciers.
Thanking you, I am very cordially,
P. J. ARMSTRONG, Sr.,
Proprietor Lawndale Orpington Yards.

Ask for Oculum at the store. If you cannot get it, send us dealer's name and 25c. for trial bottle or $1.00 for large bottle. If it fails to do all we claim, we'll return your money. Circular "C" and testimonials free on request.

Send for Oculum right away

WENDELL INCUBATOR CO.- HOLLY, MICH.
SUCCESSORS TO AUTOMATIC HATCHING CO. ESTABLISHED 1895.

Our Incubators have hollow walls, air space in top and bottom, double doors, safety lamp, nothing to catch fire, chick tray, automatically regulated and ventilated. Our price is low, our goods are as good as any and better than many; we do not guarantee or advertise unreasonable things. Our Suspension Brooder stands above all in correct brooding principals. It broods the chicks like mother hen. We are the originator of a flannel to lay on a chick's back; our heat is above the chick, no steps to climb, impossible to pile up or crowd, can be used in doors or out, made of metal, four sizes. We make Non-Freezing Drinking Fountains and Poultry Supplies of all kinds.

The Sure Way To Poultry Profits

Makes healthier and more productive hens

Prof. James E. Rice, of Cornell University, says: "We have found Zenoleum a very satisfactory disinfectant in connection with our incubator and brooder work—our experience would justify our continuing to use Zenoleum."

Destroy Lice and Mites and Prevent the Spreading of Infectious Diseases

One who does not take proper care of his poultry has as much chance to raise them profitably as the man who tries to fill a sieve with water—it is absolutely necessary to keep poultry free from lice, mites and all disease-breeding germs and filth. When this is done, when they are given a fair chance, poultry will make you profits which, compared with the capital invested, are greater than in any other line of legitimate business. You can obtain these profits, easily and with hardly any effort, by the use of

Disinfectant, Won't Poison, Won't Explode, Won't Burn

ZENOLEUM

Has a Clean, Wholesome, Inoffensive, and Pleasing Odor

A Carbolic, Cresol, Coal-Tar Preparation "The Surest Lice Killer and Disinfectant"

A single quart is all that is necessary to rid 100 hens of lice, mites and germ filth—it cures and prevents all ordinary poultry ailments and diseases—contains nothing that is injurious — insures cleanliness and safeguards your poultry's health and your own profits. It is "the best coal-tar, carbolic, cresol disinfectant dip made" and an absolute necessity to every farmer and poultry raiser.

Sold Everywhere —and positively guaranteed to be satisfactory. If Zenoleum is not all we say it is—or even what you think it ought to be, you can have your money back—no argument, no letters, just money. Ask your dealer first, but insist upon Zenoleum and don't take a substitute—if he can't supply you, we will deliver to your station, charges prepaid—1 gal., $1.50; 5 gal., $6.25. 8-oz. size, 25c at your dealers, 35c from us prepaid. Equally beneficial for live stock. Write for free books, "Chicken Chat" and "Veterinary Adviser"—the latter is invaluable to stockmen. Your name on a postal will do.

The Zenner Disinfectant Co., 203 Lafayette Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Hatches a greater number of healthy chicks and protects them from disease.

Prof. W. R. Graham, of Ontario Agricultural College, says: "The addition of Zenoleum proved of the greatest value in maintaining the vitality of the chicks—producing 9% more. I would use this substance in every machine set." Send for official report.

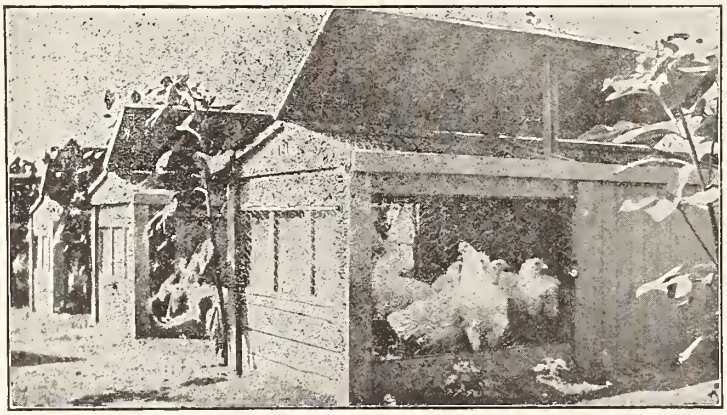
A GOOD LIVING

$1,500.00 from 60 Hens in Ten Months on a City Lot 40 Feet Square



Note the condition of the three months' old pullets at the School Farm. These pullets and their ancestors for seven generations have never been allowed to run outside the coops.

TO the average poultryman that would seem impossible and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden 40 feet wide by 40 feet long, we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practiced by the American people, still it can be accomplished by the

Philo System

The Philo System Is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry

and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success

from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks

are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler without any loss, and the broilers are of the very best quality, bringing here 3 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-Months-Old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each Per Month

in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using.

Our new book, THE PHILO SYSTEM OF POULTRY KEEPING, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell

One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel

Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves 2 Cents on Each Chicken

No lamp required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps, or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Testimonials

South Britain, Conn., April 19, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have followed your system as close as I could; the result is a complete success. If there can be any improvement on nature your brooder is it. The first experience I had with your System was last December. I hatched 17 chicks under two hens, put them as soon as hatched in one of your brooders out of doors and at the age of three months I sold them at 35c a pound. They then averaged 2½ pounds each, and the man I sold them to said they were the finest he ever saw, and he wants all I can spare this season. Yours truly,

A. E. NELSON.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—No doubt you will be interested to learn of our success in keeping poultry by the Philo System. Our first year's work is now nearly completed. It has given us an income of over $500.00 from six pedigree hens and one cockerel. Had we understood the work as well as we now do after a year's experience, we could have easily made $1,000.00 from the six hens. In addition to the profits from the sale of pedigree chicks, we have cleared over $960.00 running our hatchery plant, consisting of 56 Cycle hatchers. We are pleased with the results and expect to do better the coming year. With best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours, (MRS.) C. P. GOODRICH.

FROM POULTRY

The Poultry Review

A Monthly Magazine Devoted to Progressive Methods of Poultry Keeping

The Poultry Review is edited by E. W. Philo, author of the Philo System Book and founder of the Philo National Poultry Institute.

It is edited and printed on a practical poultry farm, where experiments are being conducted and reported in full in the Review. New discoveries and improvements are described and illustrated, and each issue contains a number of letters of experience and suggestion from followers of the Philo System.

Rev. W. W. Cox, our associate editor, is conducting a Philo System Plant, and his "Notes from a Six Hen Plant" in each issue have created considerable interest, and contain much valuable instruction. The first year's work on this plant netted over $500.

In addition to the best original articles it is possible to obtain, a review of the best articles from over a hundred publications is made—the "cream" of the poultry press arranged for the busy reader.

Photo taken from the roof of the Philo National Poultry Institute, showing a portion of the Poultry Plant where there are now over 5,000 pedigreed White Orpingtons on less than half an acre of land.

Another thing that is proving of great value to our subscribers is our Information Department. Our editors are always ready to help subscribers. When any difficult problem arises and you see no way of solving it, write us, and we will give you a prompt personal reply. It is quite probable that we have had a similar experience and can help you. Although no charge is made for this service, it is worth many times the subscription price.

For 1911 the Poultry Review guarantees the largest circulation of any paper of its kind—over 100,000 copies monthly, reaching the best class of poultrymen in every state and over thirty foreign countries.

TESTIMONIALS

E. R. Philo, Publisher Poultry Review, Elmira, N. Y. Box 214, Medicine Hat, Alta., Can., April 16, 1910.

Dear Sir:—Of all the poultry journals I take, I would fail in all rather than in the Review as I really like your paper the best of them all. Now I do not say this to curryfavor, nor for any other purpose, because I really like your paper for the pithy and sound articles. There is no dry reading in it as there is in other poultry journals, such as accounts of poultry shows that do not really concern any one but those who are written about. I do not think that any one in any part of the country cares who wins and who does not. It is all right in a local show, written and published by a local paper. Well, success and great success for the Review, and I hope to receive it regularly in the future.

Very sincerely yours,
R. G. Wetmore.

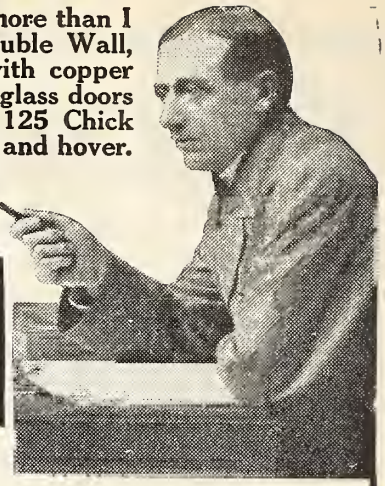
Why Pay More

It is simply throwing money away to pay more than I ask for my 125 Egg, Hot Water, Double Wall, California Redwood Incubator with copper tank and boiler, large double glass doors and roomy nursery and 125 Chick Brooder with Lamp and hover.



125 Egg Incubator 125 Chick Brooder

If you could see the Wisconsin side by side with others selling for $4.00 and $5.00 more, you would agree with me that to pay more than my price and get less value is the height of folly.

If Ordered Together Both for $10 Freight Paid East of the Rockies

You see I know what I am talking about, for I have bought and compared side by side others on the market. Over in the other columns I have pointed out these comparisons for your benefit exactly as they are and you can judge for yourself how much less you get for the extra money you pay.

That's why I ask "Why Pay More?"

Why My Sales Double Every Year

There is a lot of people who have learned the truth of my statements. They have saved those extra dollars and each year this number is increasing. Each year my sales are doubling and this enables me to improve my machines—give better value for the same money. I won't raise the price—though in comparison with others, I know they are easily worth $15.00. I want to give the biggest and best incubator and brooder bargain on the market and I am doing it. There is none on the market that approaches them even at ⅓ more cost and I'll prove it to you.

Natural Finish California Redwood

20,000 Machines in One Year

That's the high watermark and nothing but genuine merit can ever make it possible. Then to double it—certainly it requires the very best at the lowest cost to climb into public favor at such a rate. But that is what increases the sales of the Wisconsin Incubators and Brooders.

Every machine I sell through my advertising sells me an average of four more and each of those four sell an average of two, making an endless chain of sales—all because of the excellent results they give my customers and the bargain price I make of $10.00 for two machines, freight paid.

I Ship Them on 30 Days' Trial

You have ample time to test them out and if not completely satisfied you can send them back at my expense. Out of the thousands I ship every year if I told you how many ever come back I doubt if you would believe me.

Why I Can Sell Better Machines at One-Third Less Cost Than Others

I was the first to make and sell an incubator and brooder for $10.00, freight paid. It was two years before my imitators got busy. I had a good start on them and they are farther behind today than ever.

It takes experience (more so than money) to know how to produce a successful incubator and sell it at my price. That's why the imitations cost more and are of inferior value. You want the original—the best and one of longest proved reputation. Then don't be misled—get the Wisconsin. You take no chances, for

Just think of it. Does it not stand to reason that I must have machines of exceptional merit to put them out on 30 days trial—guarantee them five years and sell them for about $5.00 less than others charge for machines of less quality?

The Wisconsin incubator is hot water type, has double side walls with dead air space between; top has three walls; large double glass doors; copper tank and boiler; roomy nursery beneath egg tray; self-regulating; made of high grade California Redwood, stained and varnished so you can see quality of lumber (not painted to cover up cheap timber), turned legs, completing a machine that has no equal at anywhere near the price.

The brooder is a roomy, well made, properly heated and ventilated machine. Fitted with hover, oil lamp and wire scratching yard as illustrated. Both machines complete—ready to use with Taylor "Tycos" thermometers, O. K. burners, galvanized lamps. Egg tester—everything but the oil.

If you don't wish to order direct from this advertisement—don't buy until you send for my 1911 Free Catalog. Write for a copy today.

This illustration shows the double walls, dead air space construction of our machines.

What Users Say

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Dardanelle, Ark.

Dear Sirs:—You have the best incubator on the market, regardless of price, and I am perfectly satisfied with the one I purchased from you. Out of four hatches I got 360 chicks. The Wisconsin requires less attention and burns less oil than any other incubator I have ever used and the regulator is perfect. By following the book of valuable instructions anybody can have good luck and it does not take an experienced person to run a Wisconsin. Any child that can read can run your incubator. I am going to get another right away. JESS C. ADNEY, P.O. Box 185

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Grass Lake, Mich.

Dear Sirs:—I do not think there is a better machine on earth than your incubator. I have taken off four hatches and I got a 100 per cent hatch the first three times and a 99 per cent hatch the fourth time. From the first three hatches I got 115 chicks from 115 eggs, 105 chicks from 105 eggs and 109 chicks from 109 eggs. No incubator on earth can beat that. I will stand by this statement as I can prove it. A. JESSUP, R. No. 3

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Blanchester, Ohio

Gentlemen:—I am well pleased with the way your incubator works. I think that chick nursery underneath your egg tray is all right as you do not have to take the chicks out until they are all hatched and they come downstairs like the children in the morning. I set the incubator three times and got 245 chicks and the best part of it is that they are all running around our yard today and the first two hatches are full grown.

F. FERKEL

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Ripley, Tenn.

Gentlemen:—The Wisconsin Incubator I purchased of you has proven more than satisfactory in every respect. I have had most excellent hatches with it. From my first hatch I got 98 chicks from 110 eggs. I am very glad indeed that I purchased a Wisconsin incubator and brooder, for $10.00, instead of the higher priced machines, which I feel sure could give no better results. I have just taken off another hatch and wish you could see them. They are beauties. M. A. GILLESPIE,

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Pimento, Ind.

Gentlemen:—We had fine results with your incubator. We set it four times and it hatched 90 per cent each time. There are several different makes of machines in this locality but the Wisconsin easily beats them in every way. The brooder is everything that is claimed for it and the two together make a complete outfit for a chicken raiser, and I recommend them to be the best on the market regardless of price.

Proof in a Nutshell

Here are a few comparisons of "proofs" that will help you to avoid making a mistake in deciding which machines to buy;

1st The Wisconsin has double walls with dead air space, a decided advantage. Some have no dead air space.

2nd Egg chamber in the Wisconsin is fully ten inches deep. Some, to cheapen cost of making are scant 8 inches deep.

3rd This makes the nursery less than 2 inches and too shallow for little chicks. In the Wisconsin the nursery is 3 inches deep.

4th In the Wisconsin there is plenty room between the egg tray and the door for the chicks to get in the nursery. In some incubators you have to open the door in order to put the chicks in the nursery.

5th The Wisconsin has large double glass doors through which the thermometer can be easily read. Some have a small single glass, making it necessary to open the door to read thermometer.

6th Workmanship and material in the Wisconsin show decidedly of better grade—machine is larger, better finished—superior in every way and sells for less money. If you will make these comparisons—weigh them well, I know you will order my machines and be better pleased for these are cold facts which actual comparisons have proved.

More Users' Letters

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Elkader, Iowa

Dear Sirs:—I am pleased to say that your Wisconsin Incubator is a success. I placed 125 eggs in it and hatched 110 chicks. This can be done by any one who takes an interest in the business. The three brooders I bought of you are just the things to raise the chicks with. The instructions with your machines are very easy to follow and the eggs are turned easier in your machine than in many high priced machines. I give my machines no attention during the night as many of my neighbors do with inferior makes. ELMER PEAKE

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Odessa, Mo.

Gentlemen:—It pleases us greatly to be able to say that your incubator is a jewel. We have seen several incubators in operation and none have equalled the Wisconsin. Through six hatches last spring we never averaged less than 90 per cent. We also had excellent results with turkey and duck eggs. By closely following your directions your machine has brought us success. We were also pleased to find the material and construction exactly as represented. H. S. REDDICK

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Vickery, Ohio

Dear Sirs:—I am well pleased with your incubator. After I had taken off one hatch, I could have sold it to several of my neighbors but I did not want to sell it. With the first hatch I got 97 chicks from 100 eggs and if the eggs do not hatch it is not the fault of the incubator because it is perfect.

MARY M. STULL

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Friendship, Wis.

Dear Sirs:—I had good success with your 125 egg incubator. I took off three hatches. First hatch, 108 chicks; second hatch, 110 chicks and third hatch, 114 chicks. Your machine will hatch chickens if any of them will. It is very simple to operate as it almost takes care of itself. If I was to buy another machine it would be a Wisconsin, for I am perfectly satisfied with the work it did for me.

M. C. SMITH

Wisconsin Incubator Co., Racine, Wis. Edwards, Ind.

Gentlemen:—The incubator and brooder I purchased from you cannot be surpassed for doing the work. I had no experience in operating an incubator, but went according to instructions and it hatched every fertile egg and brought out fine, strong, vigorous chicks. No machine, no matter what the price, can do better than that. If anyone wants a fancy priced machine, they are on the market, but they can do no better work than the Wisconsin, and many of them not as good. Could name a few in our neighborhood. Yours for the increased popularity of the Wisconsin. J. A. KOONTZ

Johnson's First Old Trusty Message For 1911

Subject: Why I can sell you the best incubator, freight prepaid, for less than $10—that will last more than 10 years

THERE's only one answer—it's because I make and sell so many of them.

For the season of 1910, I made and sold over 42 solid miles of Old Trusty Incubators and Brooders.

I sold over 75,000 machines—put them end to end and they would make a solid sidewalk over 42 miles long.

From my St. Joe, Missouri, transfer station alone, I distributed 113 big 50-foot furniture car loads.

This is a tremendous amount of business for any one incubator maker to do—there must be a reason for it.

The reason is simple and quite old fashioned, yet true.

It's just because Old Trusty Incubators and Brooders are now recognized everywhere—by everybody who knows anything about incubators and brooders—to be the best machines on the American market—and sold for the least money.

Several years ago I adopted a policy of selling incubators and brooders on an 8 per cent profit plan.

Competitors said it could not be done—that I'd "go broke" and go out of business on such a policy.

But they didn't guess right on the sentiment of the people.

I haven't "gone broke"—on the contrary, I've built up the biggest business in the world in my line. I'm selling more machines now than any five of my next nearest competitors put together

My 8 per cent profit plan meant that I'd rather get a little profit on each machine on a big volume than a big profit on each machine on a small volume.

And now I'm at it again for 1911 with a factory output of 100,000 machines—and a lower profit plan—7%—or less than 70 cents on a machine.

I didn't have enough to go around for 1910—maybe I won't have enough to go around in 1911.

Now, I believe there are other good incubators and brooders on the market, but I don't believe there's one that is as good as the Old Trusty—and 75,000 people last year agreed with me—agreed to the extent of sending me their money for machines.

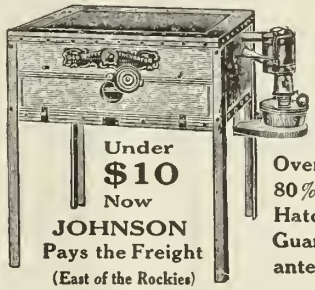
Every year I am adding expensive machinery to my factory, which enables me to cut down the cost of building incubators.

This year I've just installed two high pressure boilers, 175 horse power each; one 175 horse power Corliss Engine; one 135 horse power Four Valve Erie Engine and two new generators, an 80 horse power and one 175. Each individual piece of machinery in my factory is now run with an individual electric motor, yet it all started with that one man power And it's all been made possible with my policy of small profits on a big volume.

And the credit (thank you, one and all) is all due to my chicken raising friends, who found out that Johnson made the best incubator on earth and that he sold it on a live-and-let-live price.

All I ask at this time is the privilege of explaining this proposition to you in my big free incubator and poultry book.

30 60 or 90 Days' Trial — 10 Year Guarantee



Over 80% Hatches Guaranteed

I take a lot of pride and get a lot of pleasure out of writing that poultry book every year, because what I put into it is the result of actual experience, gathered by myself and by my poultry raising customers. There's no "hyfalutin" language in the book, no dreams of art as illustrations, but just plain, right-down-to-the-ground facts on poultry raising for people who want to make money with an incubator And every illustration is an actual photograph. This book is not leather bound, nor hand illuminated, nor is it a de luxe edition. It isn't intended to be an ornament to your library shelf, it is just a big book of actual facts on incubators and brooders, written for people who want to know how to make real money out of their poultry—and make it quick with the least possible expenditure and outlay for the proper equipment to do it with.

There are hundreds of photographs in my big book and a lot of testimonials, a lot of poultry information, a lot of feeding information, incubator experience from customers throughout the world—and a full description of Old Trusty Incubators and Brooders and how to use them.

With the book, I quote you my price on these machines delivered at your railroad station—freight charges prepaid, east of the Rockies, and all ready to run.

Poultry raising is growing more profitable every year. Eggs and poultry are increasing in price every month, yet chickens are no harder to raise and don't cost any more to feed than they ever did. So higher prices for eggs and poultry mean increased profits for the producer.

The poultry business is going to be better for the producer every year. Are you getting your share—either in country, or small towns or city back yards?

Let me mail you my book at once. Fill out the coupon printed below, or send me a postal Just say, "Johnson, I want the book." I'll do the rest

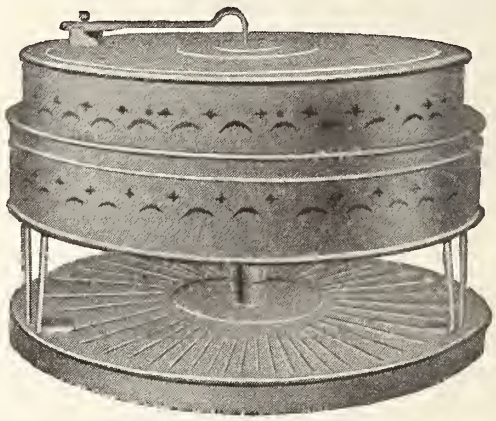
Cycle Brooder Hatcher, a complete all metal, fire-proof hatching and brooding plant for only $8.00.



The All-Metal, 50-egg Cycle Hatcher only $6.00, complete.

Our New Discoveries Make Poultry Keeping Easy and Profits Sure

Our machines were used exclusively in the original Philo System plant, where over $1,500 FROM 60 HENS IN TEN MONTHS has been cleared from the sale of eggs, baby chicks and fowls, raised on a city lot 40 feet square. One of the largest hatching plants in America saved over $700 this year by using our system of brooding. We sell the best brooder ever made for only $2.50.

One party hatched and raised $500 worth of poultry last year with four metal mothers, and hundreds of others are delighted with our machines and our new way of raising poultry. Our combined machine hatches and broods perfectly at the same time, with only one lamp and one-fifth the oil used in other machines. Once filling the lamp completes the hatch. It runs as steadily as a clock in any room from cellar to garret, and our Long Burning Safety Lamp runs on for weeks without attention. It is the only machine that airs the eggs in the natural way and applies the heat to the chicken like the mother hen.

Sirs: I have used your incubators, both the Cycle Hatcher and the Brooder Hatcher, during two seasons, and found them very satisfactory, as they were easily managed and gave excellent results every time. The Brooder Hatcher makes a convenient place for brooding the little chicks when first hatched, before putting them into the fireless brooders.

The Sure Way To Poultry Profits

Makes healthier and more productive hens

Prof. James E. Rice, of Cornell University, says: "We have found Zenoleum a very satisfactory disinfectant in connection with our incubator and brooder work—our experience would justify our continuing to use Zenoleum."

Destroy Lice and Mites and Prevent the Spreading of Infectious Diseases

One who does not take proper care of his poultry has as much chance to raise them profitably as the man who tries to fill a sieve with water—it is absolutely necessary to keep poultry free from lice, mites and all disease-breeding germs and filth. When this is done, when they are given a fair chance, poultry will make you profits which, compared with the capital invested, are greater than in any other line of legitimate business. You can obtain these profits, easily and with hardly any effort, by the use of

Disinfectant, Won't Poison, Won't Explode, Won't Burn

ZENOLEUM

Has a Clean, Wholesome, Inoffensive, and Pleasing Odor

A single quart is all that is necessary to rid 100 hens of lice, mites and germ filth—it cures and prevents all ordinary poultry ailments and diseases—contains nothing that is injurious — insures cleanliness and safeguards your poultry's health and your own profits. It is "the best coal-tar, carbolic, cresol disinfectant dip made" and an absolute necessity to every farmer and poultry raiser.

Sold Everywhere —and positively guaranteed to be satisfactory. If Zenoleum is not all we say it is—or even what you think it ought to be, you can have your money back—no argument, no letters, just money. Ask your dealer first, but insist upon Zenoleum and don't take a substitute—if he can't supply you, we will deliver to your station, charges prepaid—1 gal., $1.50; 5 gal., $6.25. 8-oz. size, 25c at your dealers, 35c from us prepaid. Equally beneficial for live stock. Write for free books, "Chicken Chat" and "Veterinary Adviser"—the latter is invaluable to stockmen. Your name on a postal will do.

The Zenner Disinfectant Co., 203 Lafayette Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Hatches a greater number of healthy chicks and protects them from disease.

Prof. W. R. Graham, of Ontario Agricultural College, says: "The addition of Zenoleum proved of the greatest value in maintaining the vitality of the chicks—producing 9% more. I would use this substance in every machine set." Send for official report.

QUEEN INCUBATORS

and Brooders as Money Makers

The rank and file poultrymen produce nine-tenths of all the poultry and eggs in this country. It is their success I am watching and working for. Nearly 75,000 of them are Queen Incubator users. I am co-operating with them and helping them make more money. Helping them to make the poultry business a paying business, a real business. They are sending oceans of poultry and eggs to market and are salting down the good, hard cash year after year. Here's to them. They are my kind. They are going the Queen Incubator way. Come, friends, join the procession.

A Little Story of One of Them

A lady living at Fort Madison, Iowa, bought a Queen Incubator last year and went into poultry in earnest—the Queen Incubator way. I do not mention her name, because I want to send you pamphlet giving the story in full, in her own words. She says:

My first hatch came off March 21—225 Chicks
Second, April 13—263 Chicks
Third, May 6—282 Chicks
Fourth, May 31—343 Chicks
Fifth, June 25—264 Chicks

1377 Strong Chicks—No Cripples

She says further:—"Chicken raising has become a pleasure since I have so trusty an incubator. I believe the Queen will hatch every hatchable egg, and, above all, I have no cripples."

Not a Professional—a Rank and File Queen User

This lady was not a professional poultry raiser. There are thousands and thousands of Queen Incubator users like her. I get the same stories of success from all of them. They wanted to make money and they found the Queen to be the machine that helps them and "makes chicken raising a pleasure."

No Chances to Take

The Queen Incubator is first, last and all the time the machine for the average poultry raiser, because it is so simple, positive and so completely automatic in all its workings.

You can't make poultry a paying business without a business machine—one that will make results sure under all conditions. You can take the word of these thousands of money-making poultry raisers as to what the Queen has done and is doing for them.

The Truth Good Enough

The truth about poultry profits is good enough. Don't be caught by exorbitant claims. I don't promise you, as some people do, that you can make three, four, five and up to ten dollars profit per hen each year with a Queen Incubator.

But I do claim that the Queen Incubator is the business machine, which makes poultry a paying business.

Incubator of Certain Results

No other machine gives such certain results to all operators under all conditions. The Queen does not perform miracles, but it does give legitimate profits that are sure and large. All are making money. Some are making comfortable fortunes. Outfit yourself with a Queen Incubator and Brooder, go into poultry in earnest, and my word for it, friends, no other business you can engage in will give you such certain and satisfactory returns on your investment.

Get a Queen on the Make-Good Plan

That's my offer, my way of selling. I'll send you a Queen on a long time trial—practically your own time. You take no chances. It must make good in your hands. If it doesn't make good, it doesn't cost you a cent. You get it direct at my low factory price. My personal, binding guarantee for ten years goes with it to you. It makes you safe. We can get together on this fair offer. Be sure to send me the coupon at the top of the page and let me send you my great free book. Season's on, act now. Address

Crystal White Orpingtons KELLERSTRASS Strain Exclusively

We now have our pens mated for spring trade. They contain the birds hatched from eggs purchased at $30 per 15 eggs from Kellerstrass Farm the year 1909, and stock raised from these birds from the $30 eggs during 1910. Proof of our claims may be obtained by writing to Kellerstrass Farm. There are blue ribbon winners among our birds that won at the shows we exhibited at during 1909 and 1910, also our good hen Peggy the Second, that won silver cup at the Richland Show 1909, as highest scoring and best shaped bird in show room above all other breeds, scoring 96 3-4. Have 5 pens mated and a fine flock of utility birds, winners among them, at the following prices: Pen 1, at $8 per 15 eggs, only a few to spare from this pen. Pens 2, 3, 4 and 5 at $5 per 15, $9 per 30, $14 per 50, and $26 per 100. Utility eggs $1.50 per 15, $2.75 per 30, $4 per 50, and $7 per 100 eggs. If hatch is not satisfactory will make it right. Order direct from this adv. as we put out no circulars or mating list. A few good cockerels left for sale. They go at $5 each if taken soon. When writing mention this paper. Ernest Kellerstrass Says

I Made $18,178.53 Net Profit In One Year Selling Chickens And Eggs

I took a flock of 1,638 chickens and made them net me a profit of $11.09 per bird in 12 months' time. My farm and books are open for inspection to any State Poultry Experimental Station. If your station doesn't find the above statements true, I'll donate $1,000 in cash to your institute.

My New Book Tells HOW I DID IT

In my new poultry book I tell how I made $3,600 in one season from 30 hens on a lot 24x40, by feeding the scraps from my table three times a day. I'll give you the names of those who paid me over $2,000 for the eggs alone from these fowls—you can refer to them.

I'll tell you how I make my chickens weigh 2½ pounds at 8 weeks of age.

I tell how I prepared my chickens for the show room, so that I won over 90 per cent of all the blue ribbons offered during 1907 and 1908. This has never been published before.

This book covers all branches—it tells everything necessary to success with poultry. It tells you what I have done—how I started.

I Tell You Everything That is Necessary to Success in the Poultry Business.

It also gives you my opinion and experience that I have had with advertising solicitors of poultry journals.

It also gives my opinion and experience that I have had with poultry judges in the show room, and why, in my opinion, the little fellow don't get what he thinks he ought to have in the show room. I tell it just as I have seen it and experienced it. There are several pages in this book taken from my records, and from my cash book and ledger. There are no secrets—I tell it all.

Try my way and you can raise them by the hundreds

WORLD'S FOREMOST WHITE WYANDOTTES

Have been the greatest winners for the past fifteen years at the leading shows of the United States and Canada. : : : :

Many owe their success to my strain because I have made them a winning strain with my great care and study for over 20 years. I have won the highest honors including many 1st and 2d prizes at Madison Square, N. Y., Worlds Fair, Boston, Chicago, and my greatest success has been in breeding my own winners, what very few can claim in their winnings. I have sold winners for every prominent show in the U. S. and Canada, and the past year I sold prominent winners, many of them 1st and special prize winners for best in shape and color at Alaska-Youkon Exposition at Seattle, also Chicago, Indianapolis, Madison Square, N. Y., Boston, Pittsburg, Pa., Louisville, Ky., Montreal aod Ottawa, Ont., and other shows many of them in the strongest competition with birdsbought from every noted breeder in America.

I sell all my stock on approval. That is, if not satisfactory can be returned at my expense and I will freely return your money in full. That alone should prove what I claim and my type was considered best at New York shows a year ago above all other breeders; that is, the low blockey type and stay white birds. In fact, have bred out the brass years ago. I have also bred for vigor and great laying and I have the farm for it. I keep my fowls in open front coops and chicks have free farm range. If you want some high class breeders or show birds write me.

My egg trade has been one of my best ads. I have for many years gained many of my best patrons with my egg trade. I sell eggs from only the best matings, same as I hatch from and from only carefully selected matings. At $5.00 per sit, or 3 sittings for $12.00, will be limited and only the early ones will be sure of eggs on time so if you place order now, with amount, you can have them when wanted, for I book only limited number for any one time. Satisfied customers have been my best ad. Your success is my success. J. H. JACKSON, HUDSON, MASS. Lock Box 89.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL
FOR STANDARD BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO RAISE IT

Vol. XVII CHICAGO, ILL., MARCH, 1911 No. 3

What One Gets from a Poultry Paper.

Some Valuable Thoughts that Perhaps Never Occur to the Majority of Readers. How to Profit by Reading.

By W. H. Mathews.

SOME three years ago one of a group around the store stove turned to me and asked, "Say, Mathews, how long does it take a hen to make an egg?" I quit, cold. I couldn't have told any more than a rabbit because, even had I known, it would have been impossible to have explained it to him. Naturally, I lost caste right there, for he said:

"Huh! I thought you took and read all sorts of poultry papers."

Now, as a matter of fact, except for a short sentence of mine some time ago in the Successful Poultry Journal I have never seen the true answer to that question in any poultry paper. As most of the discoveries of that character are found first in the scientific journals and generally take a long time before being discovered by the poultry world, we need not expect much science in the poultry journal.

What, then, do we get from a poultry paper?

We get lots of facts and lots of mis-statements; lots of theories and more practice; from all of which the chaff must be winnowed. But it is neither the facts, the theories or the practice that are of ultimate importance.

What we actually should get is what in my opinion is the greatest possible aid to both our business and our private lives—the habit of thinking.

To my mind there is no poor breed of poultry, nor no good breed, no poor land nor no bad land. There are only thinking and unthinking farmers.

Last year while going through a narrow channel near my place, a steamer passed and capsized a row boat, drowning one of its occupants. I asked the captain why he failed to slow down in passing the row-boat.

"What did you think they'd do?" I asked.

"To tell the truth," he replied, "I'm so used to those row boats I did not think anything."

"Capt. Bob," I said, "you're a good friend but you're the worst kind of a captain, because you're an unthinking one."

And that's the worst kind of a poultry keeper, the unthinking one.

Once I studied Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations" and later Kant's "Pure Reason." What they contained I don't remember now; but one thing they did do which was lasting, and that was to help teach me to think.

No editor of a poultry paper can or does guarantee that all statements in his paper are true. But all can and most do guarantee that if you read the articles carefully each week or month and re-read them, you will soon contract that very necessary and profitable habit—thinking. It will come in spite of you.

If one once gets the habit of really thinking about one's poultry, one is very apt to go farther in his spare moments and think about one's own life and habits. Possibly this might also lead to a few scattered thoughts about the character of the men who are running for political offices. It seems a hopeless job for anything to teach the latter but there is a bare possibility that it may come indirectly.

If I might venture some advice it is to read the poultry journal carefully. If you disagree with something said, wait a day, then read it again. Then wait two days, study and think it over and if you still disagree, write your views to the author, or better yet, to the magazine. There's no disgrace in the losing side of an argument if one has not descended to personalities. And by expressing your views you not only have helped yourself, but may perhaps have materially helped the editor, and in any event you will have shown two things, first, at least a tendency to think, and, second, some appreciation of that very valuable stimulus to thinking, the poultry journal.

Avoiding Complaints from Egg Customers.

Some Good Advice Which Should be Noted by all Breeders for their Own Benefit as Well as for their Customers.

By H. S. Babcock.

THE seller and the buyer of eggs for hatching are equally interested in one thing—the quality of the eggs. In other words, the eggs should be (1) produced by first-class stock, properly mated; (2) each egg should be fertilized; (3) the chicken hatched from the eggs should be vigorous and livable.

Upon the first element of quality little need be said. The seller should never offer for sale eggs that are not laid by the best hens of the breed, mated to a cock bird in all respects suitable to the hens, so that there is a reasonable prospect that the chickens produced will be typical of the variety and excellent in characteristics. And the buyer naturally wants no other.

In respect to the second element, it is to be observed that it is by no means the same thing as the third. Fowls that are of a weak constitution often produce fertile eggs, some of which hatch and others of which start to hatch, but the germs of which die in various stages of growth. Such eggs are always a great disappointment. Tested on the seventh to the tenth day, they seem to be all right. Development has begun and has proceeded regularly. The buyer is pleased and expects satisfactory results. But when the full period of incubation has passed, he finds that only a few chickens have emerged from the shells, and those which have, seem weak, and often perish early in their chickenhood. While it is desirable that there should be a high percentage of fertility, that of itself is not enough.

S. C. WHITE ORPINGTONS.
A pen of Crystal strain birds in the breeding yards of Mrs. Ed. Hissong, Winfield, Iowa.

The third is the important element. Viable chickens are wanted. Better five good, strong, healthy, vigorous chickens than fifteen weak, poor, scrawny, feeble, miserable ones. In the end the five good ones will be more in number and greater in value than the fifteen poor ones. It pays to strive for the good ones.

It is not always possible to secure just what one wants in eggs for hatching. A skillful breeder may make an error in his matings. The male bird may not always breed as expected. But generally speaking, the breeder who gives time and thought to his matings will be able to insure the right quality in the chickens.

The fertility of eggs depends very largely upon the compatibility of the male and the females with whom he is mated. If he is attentive to them, and has neither too many nor too few, the eggs laid will be usually fertile. Just how many females should be placed with a male depends upon various considerations. (1) the breed, the heavier fowls requiring fewer females than the smaller ones; (2) the age of the male, a cockerel being able to properly attend to more hens than an old cock; (3) the activity of the male, some individuals fertilizing the eggs of more hens than others of the same breed and of the same age; (4) the conditions under which the fowls are kept, for a pen in confinement should be smaller than a flock allowed full liberty. But if one must err at all, it is safer to err on the side of small numbers. There are fewer instances of lack of fertility in pens where one male consorts with but four or five females than in pens where the number of females is very large.

But to get viable chickens, those robust youngsters which successfully combat all the ills chickenhood is heir to and develop into fine, strong, valuable fowls, one must look to the constitutional vigor of the parents. The females should be strong, healthy and vigorous, and nevertheless feminine in appearance. And the male should show abounding health in every movement—be a male all over—and one full of life, activity and gallantry. In his crowing, walking, scratching and attention to his mates, in the vivid color of his comb and the lustre of his plumage, health should be boldly and clearly stamped. Both sexes should be fully developed—immature birds are not desirable for breeders—and if size is sought after the females should be of good size for the variety. While overgrown birds of either sex are not, as a rule, desirable, there is less risk in using an overgrown female than an overgrown male. The male should be of medium size for the breed—too small ones are not satisfactory and big ones are often too sluggish for the accomplishment of the desired results.

If the best fowls only, properly mated, are used in the breeding pen, and due consideration is given to securing such specimens as have been indicated, and these birds are judiciously fed and cared for, many of the complaints annually made about eggs for hatching will cease. The breeder who furnishes to his customer such eggs has done his part, and done it well. The buyer who receives such eggs has no right to complain.

But it is to be remembered that between the receipt of the right kind of eggs for hatching and the developed broods in the fall, there may be many a slip. A viable chick may not live; accident or disease may carry him off; germs of all sorts are lurking about to attack him, and cats, rats, weasels, skunks, minks, foxes and other creatures have not forgotten their liking for chicken meat. The seller should not be blamed for any of these things.

Again it is to be remembered that the best bred chick may not develop into a fine specimen. Some are hatched culls, some are developed into culls. All breeders produce some culls. It is too bad, but it can not be helped. Even with the best of care they will still be culls. And then, sometimes, a chicken of the greatest promise develops into a cull through lack of proper care, accident, or disease. Fine birds are developed as well as bred. Constant, steady growth, under sanitary conditions, freedom from vermin and disease, food containing all the necessary elements properly combined, all these things enter into the make up of a fine fowl. And all these things the buyer of the eggs must supply, for they are beyond the control of the seller. Let the buyer think on these things before he voices his complaints for unsatisfactory results.

MARCH.

Forward march.

March on to better and greater things.

The season is marching on toward the sunny days of summer, and the breeder should be marching on to broader plans, higher aspirations and larger successes.

What though Bryant wrote:

"The stormy March has come at last
With winds and clouds and changing skies;
I hear the rushing of the blast
That through the snowy valley flies," we will turn to Shakespeare for consolation when he sings:

"Daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty," and will realize that on the winds of March are being blown away the chills of winter and the ills that otherwise might lurk around us.

The problems of mating have been solved—but whether correctly or not we soon shall know, for now the breeder's fancy turns toward the chickens which are to be. He will probably set some eggs this month. Those which are set so as to hatch about the middle of April will be early enough for profitable winter layers and late enough to stand a chance of becoming show birds.

"The buyer of ye eggs for hatching doth this month scan ye advertising columns and doth send for ye circular in the which ye high qualities and ye success in ye hall of exhibition of ye fowls are set forth in terms of laud." If you haven't planted an advertisement, don't expect a crop. One must sow if he would reap, and the printer is a man that you cannot safely pass by. You may jump others, but if you jump him you will find yourself seriously lamed.

Modern advertising knows only the superlative degree of comparison. There is no "good," and no "better," only the "best." The dictionary is turned inside out in search of laudatory expressions. A poultrymen's advertisement reads a good deal like a circus poster, "The best on earth," sounds modest beside some of the expressions used. But when all yell at the top of their voices, there is no better chance for any particular one to be heard than if all talked in a moderate tone. It is refreshing once in a great while to come across a modest advertisement whose strongest word is "good." Such always attract my attention, because they are different from the rest. Somehow they make a favorable impression upon my mind. Whether they draw trade or not is something I am unable to determine; but they certainly do draw respectful attention.

Shall the breeder issue circulars? The answer is, No and yes. No, if one expects by so doing to save the expense of advertising in the papers. He could do it, but he would find it a very expensive thing to do. He could purchase mailing lists and send out his circulars broadcast. Such lists, if compiled by show secretaries, would contain the names of breeders and exhibitors of fowls, among whom there might be an occasional buyer. If they were compiled by some of the mail-order houses, or by other persons, the chances are that they would reach only a small part of the poultry-loving and poultry-buying public. In any case it would be an expensive method of advertising. But the answer should be, Yes, if one uses the circular as an adjunct to the advertisement in poultry papers. No breeder can afford to give the full details of his stock in an advertisement. It would cost more than he could afford to pay, more than his sales would warrant. But if he uses the circular to supplement the advertisement and sends it to those whom the advertisement has attracted sufficiently to lead them to ask for more particulars, he will find it very useful. If the circular is properly prepared, it will save him much time and labor in correspondence, because through it he can anticipate many of the questions which will be asked and have for them a clear, full and satisfactory answer in type. And this is where the circular will prove its chief value. Give the publisher as liberal an advertisement as your business will warrant, and use the circular to answer as many questions as you can anticipate

But there will always be the curious who send for a circular out of mere curiosity. Be glad that there are such, and so prepare your circular as to increase their curiosity, even to the point of making them become purchasers. They are the ones whom you wish to bring under the influence of the charms of poultry breeding; they make your field in which to do missionary work; from them new recruits are to be enlisted. They may not buy the first year; possibly not the second; but if their curiosity survives to the third year they will be landed. If this class is so numerous as to make your missionary labors too expensive, there is always the chance of requiring a stamp from them with which to pay the postage. Whether it is best to make this demand is a matter for each one to settle for himself. I have tried both methods, sending circulars free, and demanding a stamp for them, and I am obliged to confess that I am uncertain which is the better method. Something is to be said in favor of each, and I prefer not to anticipate the final judgment. But I am fully convinced that it don't pay to try to jump the printer.

Do not be unnecessarily disturbed when you see published some statement which to you seems to contain dangerous error. The whole history of the world, if studied, will show that error can work no permanent injury if truth is left free to combat it. All progress in civilization, all inventions, all science, has been a struggle of the false with the true. The most triumphant error has been at last dislodged, cast down and destroyed by invincible truth. However plausible error may appear, its falsity cannot bear the penetrating light of truth, in whose rays it withers up and disappears. When error appears, therefore, keep your faith in the power of truth and turn on its white light, with the assurance that "Truth is mighty and will prevail."

The Half of the Breeding Yard.

Too Much Care Cannot be Taken in Selecting the Male Bird that is to Head the Breeding Yards—Interesting Quotations from Old Books

By Rev. C. E. Peterson.

BREEDERS will understand that the title of this article refers to the male bird, and it is a fact that cannot be set aside very readily; that if the male bird of the breeding yard fails in carrying out his part of the contract two things may happen, either one of which would mean a whole year's loss of time and disappointment.

If he is not a strong, robust bird sexually, and eager to do his duty, it will mean infertile eggs, and if he fails in health it means weak chicks, for, be it understood that a bird may be a healthy looking specimen and act right in almost every way, and yet not impregnate the eggs, and on the other hand, a bird which is not a very robust bird, may be sexually all right and at the same time his offspring will be weak and poor growers, and what every breeder desires above all things, at least every breeder ought to, is strong, healthy, robust growers from chick to maturity.

As far as the fancy points go, they ought to be carefully looked after and studied, and I would advise every reader to secure a copy of the Standard, for to mate up a pen of birds intelligently without a Standard cannot be done, except by men who for years have been breeding their chosen variety and have the Standard points fixed in their mind and know just what is wanted.

But it is dollars to doughnuts that such men have not only one Standard, but several. It is generally the man who knows the most about his breed or variety that is the most careful in his selection, and uses his Standard the most.

As far back as in the very beginning of our present era, Columella, who lived and wrote in the first century, was interested enough in poultry to give a great deal of attention to the selection of the stock, and what perhaps is not generally known, is this: Columella was really the father of the Standard of Excellence, for at that early date, nearly two thousand years ago, he compiled one which he gives in his great work on Husbandry, Book VIII, Chapter II, and which is so interesting that I will quote it in full for the benefit of those that have no access to a rather rare volume.

He says: "Moreover, it is not expedient to purchase any fowls but the most fruitful; and let them be of a very red or dark colored plumage, with black pinions, and, if it can be done, let them all be of the same color.

"Let the white be avoided; as for the most part they are tender, and not very long-lived, and good, fruitful stock of that color are not readily obtained.

"And their white color makes them an easy prey for hawks and for eagles.

"Therefore, let such as are set apart for breeding be of a right good color, of a strong body, square, large breasted, with large heads, straight bright red and small combs, white earlobes; and, of this make a notice, get the largest that can be found, and with an uneven number of toes, those that have five are reckoned the best, but let there be no cross-spurs on the leg of a hen, for the one that bears this masculine badge is obstinate and refractory, and disdains to admit the the male; and her eggs are seldom fertile, and also, when she sitteth upon her eggs, she breaks them with the sharp point of the spur."

As to the selection of the cock-bird, he further states: "It is not expedient to keep any cocks for breeding but such as are exceedingly salacious, and of the same color as the females, and with the same number of claws on each foot.

"Let him be of lofty make and stature, with a large, high comb, of a blood-red color, not crooked or awry.

"Yellow-red eyes, or tending somewhat to black; short well curved bills.

"The hackle variegated or yellowish, of a somewhat golden color, very full and falling down over their shoulders.

"Broad and muscular breast.

"Strong wings.

"Heavy, steady thighs.

"Tail very long and with feathers falling down on either side.

"Thick, short legs, well spurred.

"In temper, let him be elate, cheerful, watchful, and ready to crow often, not easily frightened, for sometime they will need to protect their conjugal flock. For such a male provide five females."

From this we find that even at this early date care was taken in the selection of the birds to be used for breeding, and all the old writers pay particular attention to the choice of the best possible cock-bird that can be gotten for a breeder.

In a little book entitled "The Poultry Maid," published in England about the middle of last Century or thereabout, there is a rather interesting little sketch given as to how the cock-bird should appear that is to be selected for a breeder. The writer, whoever it may be, for the little work is anonymous, writes as follows: "The cock should have a fine, bold, free, lively, impudent look, just as though he was about to say, 'I will be cock of the roost, and no thanks to you,' with full-sized, large wattles, and red comb; he should have a good breast and strong muscular thighs and stout legs, ornamented like a dragon's, with a pair of strong, serviceable spurs; the nails of his toes should be but slightly hooked, and very sharp; and if he is a civil, well-bred cock, he will use these more in scratching for his wives than for himself, and he should be ready to protect them and collect them together, and keep away rivals. All this, and a great deal more, he should be, else he won't deserve the affections of seven or eight loving females.

BUFF ORPINGTON MALE.

"I have my notion that such a cock might be companion enough for at least ten of the tender sex, and I have before told you what the French gentleman said to me about this, that six was enough. I say let him have eight at least."

This, as well as what I have already quoted, is interesting from the point of physical fitness and goes to show that at all times great attention has been given to the matter of a suitable cock for breeding, and too much attention cannot be given to the physical part, for, however good he may be in feather, it is the very poorest policy to breed from a physically unfit male.

In these days of close breeding and consequent lack of vigor, it cannot be hindered, whatever may be said to the contrary, except the most rigid selection be practiced, and that under no circumstances a male that is not in perfect health and robust sexual vigor be allowed in the breeding pen.

Still further; if at any time during his growth he has shown any signs of delicate health, even though he has recovered, such a bird should be refused admission to the breeding yard, as no breeder of fancy fowls that is breeding for feather can afford to neglect the physical make-up of the male bird, as he will influence every chick hatched, where one of the females would only influence the chicks hatched from her own eggs

A cowardly and niggardly specimen should be rejected. What use is a male that after a moment's fight will run into a corner and hide his head, or run with lagging tail, like the good-for-nothing he is.

A good breeder should be in full possession of all his physical powers, and the females take to such a cock and the offspring will be a hundredfold better in every way.

Close breeding, that is, breeding to feather, cannot be practiced without consequent bad results, except the greatest care is exerted in the choice of a perfectly healthy male bird.

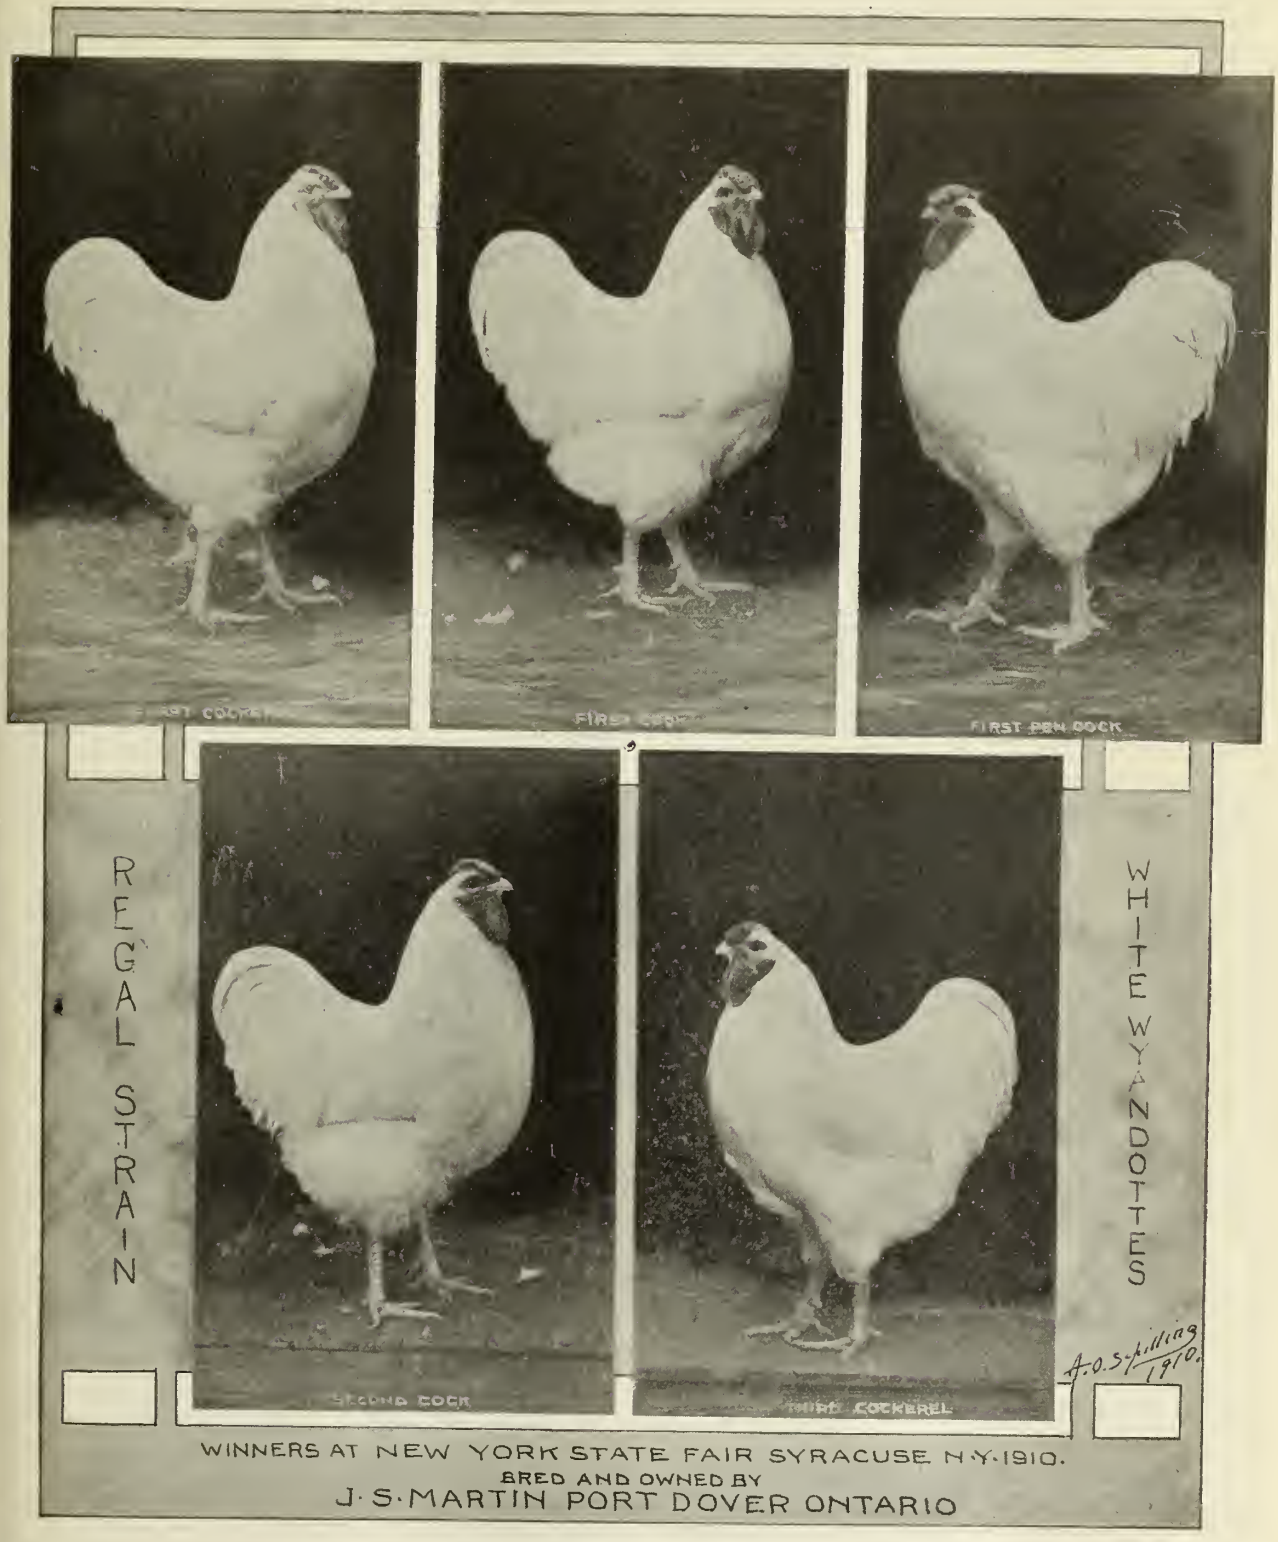
As to his fancy points, he should be the best specimen that, with Standard in hand or in head, or in both, you can pick out of your flock and it is not the very easiest matter in the world to pick out such a bird, but these are the three prominent features in a first-class breeding male. Strong, robust health, full sexual cockhood, as near perfection in form and in feather as possible.

Such a bird cannot but help to give you some offspring that will please and satisfy the demands made upon you for birds of a superior type, and you will feel that all the labor expended was well spent, when results are satisfactory, not only for strong chicks hatched to live, but at the same time, birds that will mature into specimens each of which will be a prototype of his sire.

Science may rest upon theories but art demands their practical application. A good breeder may be a man of science; he must be a man of art.

Cleanliness, sanitation and proper feeding can never become stale topics to the poultryman. They are great basic principles upon which his success is founded.

And now comes forward the man who claims that we have been hatching our chickens at two high a temperature, thus cooking the yolk of the egg enough to prevent its proper absorption by the chicken, with the result that the newly hatched chicks are liable to intestinal troubles and marked for an early grave. Overheating the eggs certainly is to be avoided—so much certainly is settled—and the rest of it, like the rat-hole referred to by Abraham Lincoln, in a commercial report, will bear looking into.



REGAL WHITE WYANDOTTES.

Regal White Wyandottes today enjoy a reputation as prize winners wherever they are known. We have heard them praised and seen them win at a great many shows both east and west, and can recall many an excellent bird that could serve as a model, all of them produced by John S. Martin, Box S, Port Dover, Can., the originator of this strain. Mr. Martin has been winning year after year at the New York State Fair at Syracuse, carrying away the lion's share of the prizes. This year was no exception. The males pictured above represent five of the cleanest cut specimens that we have seen in some time. They all were of the high quality which brought the "Regal Strain" to the front.—A. O. Schilling.

Now is the Time for Action.

March is Perhaps the Most Important Month of all the Year. Suggestions on Care, Feeding, Mating, Hatching, Etc.

By D. A. Cole.

MARCH means as much to the poultry breeder as that word given in command does to the soldier. It is presumed that both are "in line" ready for action; then carries the command that must be obeyed.

The march to the soldier means hard work, fatigue and hardships. The (month of) March, to the poultry breeder, means also work, to many of us fatigue, but we are thankful that instead of hardships, to most of us it means the month of egg orders, anticipations and my own experience teaches that many put off buying breeders until the early part of this month. This is poor policy, however, as the cheaper grades, the kind most of this class want—are usually all disposed of before this time, and the ones that are left must necessarily be much higher in price than earlier, as the breeder has been to the expense of feed, care and housing through the entire winter. Besides, it takes fowls, like people, some time to get used to new surroundings. The change adversely affects egg production and fertility.

Of course the pens of the regular breeders are all properly mated, even in the cold climates, before this month; but March means much extra labor in the poultry domains. This being the first of the spring months, nature is awakening from her long sleep. This is more in evidence among our feathered pets than anywhere else, for even where the weather is cold and blustery still the fowls seem to feel the return of coming spring, and of their natural reproductive season and are showing renewed vigor and activity. "Chanticleer" is trying to out-crow his rival, and "Biddy" is "singing" her loudest and prettiest. It is inspiring to enter the poultry house on a cold, blustery March morning, when nature seems to be endeavoring to show us what she can do as a finale to winter, and see and hear the evidence of cheer prevailing there; and how grateful and happy we feel as we pass from nest to nest and gather in "Biddy's" thank offering, for our care, and as we pick up each oval "ball of mystery," for you know each fertile egg contains a mystery never yet entirely solved, and to most of us, the whole delicate construction outside the germ is "mysterious," we wonder if this fragile shell contains for us, the embryo blue ribbon wearer for next winter's shows. This question may be answered, partly at least, by the care we are giving and have given our flocks throughout the entire winter. If each pen is headed by a healthy, vigorous male, as nearly as possible typical of his breed characteristics, and the females are kept active and in good breeding condition, neither "loaded" with fat, nor thin, but just in a good plump condition, always ready to come to meet you for the feed they are willing to work for, and if they are supplied with a good variety of feed, and other essentials to their comfort and health, you may be quite sure that a reasonable per cent of the March eggs will be fertile. Remember the keynote to fertility and health—you cannot have the former without the latter—is exercise.

The writer has not space in this article to fully treat upon the subject of care of the flock, but will try briefly to touch upon the extra care that should be given to the fowls during March. This month will bring some pleasant days, when the ground is damp and cold, and the fowls will desire so much to get out and enjoy the privilege of outdoor exercise, that if we indulge them, we must be careful they do not stay out too long, noor stand around in a draught that is sure to bring on a cold, or worse still, is liable to result in pneumonia. If the birds have been running in and out all winter, as they do in some climates, or as is customary on some farms, of course the danger is not so great. Then, too, they bring in lots of dampness on their feet, and the litter must be watched and often renewed to keep it dry and sweet, for disease and death lurk in it when allowed to become damp and foul.

I cannot refrain from praising the open front house, with front made of white canvas or duck, to be open on all days except when there is a storm or wind from the south. This is the best preventive of colds and disease I believe there is; it admits plenty of sun and air, and keeps the interior dry and sanitary.

Crop bound is another danger of late March and early April in this climate. If the birds have been sparingly fed on green stuff through the winter, the danger is greater for they will ravenously devour the frozen grass and get much of the old dead blades among the others; this also leads to diarrhea in many cases.

Look out for vermin now; the "nits" are beginning to "incubate" and the poultryman must renew his vigilance and fight with a vengeance, or they will soon gain the upper hand. I never have the red mite in my buildings, as I keep them away by the use of kerosene with all the naphthalene flakes, or moth balls it will dissolve and a few drops of carbolic acid added. This is put upon the roosts and nest boxes about once a month—once during winter is sufficient—and twice yearly I add to this enough lice powder to make a paint. I apply this with a brush to the roosts, nests, etc., and I never see a mite. This is also a good disinfectant and preventive of scaly leg. I have found the best and most easily applied remedy for the body louse to be the same powder liberally mixed in the dust bath. I used to be "bothered to death" with this pest, now I seldom see one. If, as is sometimes the case, a bird refuses to use the dust box, then it must be dusted with the powder.

Don't forget to keep the grit, shell or bone, charcoal, bran and beef scrap boxes filled. It is surprising how soon these are emptied. "Eternal vigilance is the price of success" and no where is this so true as in poultry raising. There are so many small details, but they mean much, and in the doing or neglecting of these lies the success or failure of the breeder. If the duties of March are done then, and not left until still busier April, the spring work will be well in hand.

This is the month for the hatching of the early fall show birds. We cannot treat of the care of these here, as the subject might well include a whole article. March chicks require extra care and patience, owing to the changeable and often severe weather.

Advice to Prospective Buyers

How to Get Just What You Want and What You Need and at the Lowest Price.

By L. B. Gardner.

ONE of the most trying things that falls to the lot of the breeder who is raising and selling fancy poultry is the tendency on the part of prospective purchasers to either not be very explicit in making their wants known, or of demanding quality beyond the ability of any breeder to supply. This is not intended as a kick, as breeders of fancy fowls and others as well are always glad to receive inquiries for stock, whether the inquiries are very clear or not. But a few words along this line will not be out of place at this time, as the busy season for the sale of breeding stock is now here.

Prospective buyers should be very explicit in their statements of what they want if they are certain that they know. Many young breeders are often somewhat in doubt in this matter and of course cannot be expected to be very explicit. However, if they have stock, say a flock of pullets or only a few pullets they have selected for a special mating, and wish to purchase a male bird to mate with them, they should describe their stock as well as their ability will allow and then leave the selection of the male bird with the breeder from whom they wish to make the purchase. There are but few breeders who will take advantage of the confidence thus placed in them. They are as anxious to please as the purchaser is to be pleased. Their reputation as breeders depends upon the treatment accorded their customers. Breeders of experience can often give younger breeders valuable pointers besides making them a better selection than they could make themselves, if they will only give the older heads the chance. If the pullets are weak or strong in certain sections make note of them in sending inquiries for prices so that the breeder can select a bird that would mate well with the stock and in a measure overcome the weak points and if possible strengthen the strong points. Incorporate into your letter all the information you think would be of value to a breeder in making a selection. Imagine yourself a breeder shipping out birds to customers all over the country, and fix up your letter just as you would wish prospective buyers to send them in to you. Be as explicit and plain as you can. You can't be too plain in your statements of what you want, but on the other hand do not make demands that are beyond all reason. Do not ask for a 95 point bird for a few dollars, for the chances are ten to one that you will not get it. Do not ask for a pullet bred Barred Rock cockerel that will score 95 or better. These may be extreme cases but they are actual demands that are often made, nevertheless. Be reasonable and give the breeder a chance to treat you fairly. Another thing, do not mistrust him until you have the very best reasons for doing so. Try to let him know that you have confidence in him and trust to his judgment and if there is any manhood in him he will do the very best by you of which he is capable. If he cannot supply you with what he believes will be the best for you he will frankly tell you so.

Mention has only been made of a few of the many things that would materially facilitate matters bearing upon the purchase and sale of stock. There are many other things that might be mentioned but we will leave them for another time. These few suggestions well digested will do a world of good to the seller and prospective buyer as well.

Success in any business depends largely upon the ability of the prosecutor to cut down the cost of production, without reducing the quality of the product. Small leaks must be stopped because they, like the leaks in a dike, may become gradually larger until they sweep the dike away and pour in the devastating floods of bankruptcy.

The instruction found in the columns of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is the best and most reliable that money can buy, and that the most practical and successful poultrymen of America can produce. The Journal is therefore a school for the amateur and a help to the expert, and neither can afford to be without it.

We want agents everywhere, and will pay liberally for good workers. Write us for terms.

For the year 1911, SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL guarantees an average monthly circulation of 30,000 copies.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is a monthly magazine of national circulation and advertisers secure a profitable business from all sections. Changes of ads must be received not later than the 15th of the month, and new ads the 20th, in order to insure insertion in the month following.

SUBSCRIBERS GUARANTEED AGAINST LOSS.

It is the policy of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL to accept advertisements from only thoroughly honorable poultrymen and business firms. Great care is taken in this respect. We therefore guarantee all our subscribers against loss through deliberate fraud on the part of any display advertiser in our columns. If by chance any subscriber should be swindled in this way we will make good his loss if within 30 days from the time of sending his order to the advertiser he will furnish proof that will enable us to convict the advertiser of intentional fraud, and provided the subscriber proves to us that when writing to the advertiser he stated that the ad was seen in SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL.

However interesting the problem of predetermining the sex may be, it is much more profitable to spend one's time in raising the sexes after they have been determined by nature.

Poultry books and poultry journals contain a vast amount of valuable information, but that information will never be available to you unless you read, think about, and thoroughly digest their contents. Assimilated information will make you grow as a breeder just as assimilated food makes your flocks grow in size.

Join The American Poultry Association.

Join the American Poultry Association. This advice is not given simply because it will pay you to do so, but because it is your plain duty to do so. The American Poultry Association, through the Standard which it issues, has made possible the poultry show at which the finest products of the breeder's art are exhibited; it has enabled the judging of fowls to be done upon principles which are sound, reasonable and defensible; it has unified the efforts of breeders so as to hasten with all due speed the perfection of each breed and variety; it has defined what an exhibition bird is, created a demand for such birds, and enhanced their value; it has increased the demand for and the price of eggs for hatching; it has, indirectly and directly, improved the status of the poultryman and his industry, and it is the foundation upon which the fancy rests securely. Not to support an organization which has done so much for the fancier is meanly selfish and plainly suicidal.

The organization needs you. It may be able to get on in the future as it has got on in the past without your aid, but it nevertheless needs you. There is strength in numbers. The larger the membership, the greater will be the influence of the organization. The more members there are the greater will be the association's income, and the larger its income the more it can do for the poultry industry. Compare the Standard just issued with the one issued in 1874. That first edition with its 102 pages, with its single rude picture to define the nomenclature, was for its time a great achievement and no poultryman can look back to it without feelings of grateful pride. But the 1910 edition, with its 331 pages, its many illustrations of different varieties, its plates of feathers depicted in natural colors, and its more exact descriptions and definitions, make an immense stride forward. And this great advance has been rendered possible because the membership of the association has grown with lapse of time.

The organization needs you for a still more important reason. "In the multitude of counselors there is safety." It needs your counsels, your experience, your wisdom, your suggestions. The men who compose its membership are earnest men and wise men and are laboring to direct the association in the right direction. As an individual you may be no wiser than any one of the present members. But where many are associated together in a work, two things, at least, are possible, the needs of the industry will be more clearly and fully undestood, and the method of supplying those needs will be more certainly apparent. Some suggestions from you may be just what the association needs to secure that "safety" which it desires.

But if one can not rise to the plane of duty and must keep on the lower plane of selfish advantage, still he should join the American Poultry Association. It will pay him to do so. By so doing he will become a member of a great association, will meet men of character and ability whose interests are in unison with his, and will gain directly in knowledge and inspiration, so that his own success will be greater and more certain. There are men, whom to know and to associate with upon terms of equality is a liberal education. Many such men are enthusiastic fanciers and many of them are members of the American Poultry Association. Is it wise, is it profitable, to deny yourself of these many advantages? Can you afford to do so for the few dollars which once paid will make you a member for life? When there is legislation to be passed affecting your industry and actually pulling at your purse strings, do you wish to be in the position of a helpless onlooker, or in the position of one able to shape such legislation advantageously? Is it more pleasurable and more profitable to kick helplessly than to legislate efficiently and effectively? It is for you to decide, but even a wrong decision will not affect the value of the advice to join the American Poultry Association.

The fact is that the American Poultry Association needs you, and you need the association. It needs you for the help you can bring in making it more influential for good in the advancement of the great poultry industry, an industry which is rapidly approaching, if it has not already reached, the position of a billion dollar industry in its annual products. But as much as it needs you, you need it still more, because every advance it makes is an advance favorable to you, every success it wins increases your success. It does not exist selfishly for itself; it exists for you and all other poultrymen. It is a powerful engine, creating better conditions for the poultry industry and those engaged in it from year to year, and drawing you and all other poultry men nearer and nearer to the goal of magnificent success. If you consult your interests you will join the American Poultry Association; if you do your duty you will join the American Poultry Association; and, therefore, in the interest of selfish ambition and unselfish duty we repeat, "Join the American Poultry Association."

The Annual Election of The American Poultry Association.

The nomination ballots for the president, two vice-presidents, secretary, and three members of the executive committee of the American Poultry Association, have been sent out by the election commissioner, and the most of them will probably have been returned before these words are read. It is to be hoped that the membership will vote quite generally, so that the candidates presented for election may be thoroughly representative men. Those who have not already returned their nomination ballots should do so without delay in order that they may have a voice in the choice of candidates.

Col. Bryant, who has adorned the office of the presidency for four years, voluntarily retires, and a new man must be chosen. The present secretary is a candidate for renomination. One of the members of the executive committee aspires to the office of president, and will cause a vacancy in the committee if his aspirations meet with the favor of the members.

Without advocating any particular candidates we may be permitted to point out a few considerations which should govern the voting for officers of the American Poultry Association.

Every member should vote. In no other way can it be said that the officers truly represent the desires of the majority of the members. This is both a duty and a privilege and no one should shirk a duty or despise a privilege.

Officers, who have faithfully performed their duties, if candidates for re-election and if not opposed by persons better qualified to perform the duties of the positions, should be re-elected.

The best qualified men, irrespective of whether they have held the offices in the past or not, should be elected. No man has any title to an office—the offices belong to the whole body of the membership, and the members have a right to bestow them as they see fit. An office is a trust, and every trustee should be honest and capable. The only claim that any one can rightfully make to a trusteeship of this kind is that he is competent and faithful. And the members, each for himself, should scan the list of candidates carefully and vote for the men who, he believes, will best represent the great poultry industry and best fill the respective offices. The American Poultry Association demands clean men, competent men, honest men, progressive men, as officers, and fortunately is able to provide the men it demands. It has been fortunate, as a rule, in the men it has chosen for office, and it has excellent timber for all the offices in its gift.

When the election ballots are sent out let every man do his duty and we will have a list of officers of which the American Poultry Association may well be proud.

Don't.

Punch's famous advice to those contemplating marriage was a terse "Don't." Whether that was good or bad advice upon the particular subject, it is certain that upon many subjects such advice is excellent.

When, for example, you see an article in your favorite journal with which you do not agree, and are tempted to order the publication stopped; when you have a letter of inquiry, and weariness or laziness whispers put off the answer until tomorrow; when you have an order for eggs from a particular pen and you lack a half sitting which could be made up from another pen; when you have sold a winning cockerel and are tempted to substitute another "just as good;" when you get an unreasonable letter of complaint and your spirit is filled with anger as you think of replying in a caustic vein; when you are slighted or insulted and you burn to get even; when an injury rankles in your breast and you are led to cherish a grudge; then remember the advice of Punch—"Don't."

When you are tempted to neglect some important duty in connection with the care of your fowls, whether it relate to cleaning their premises, supplying them with proper food or plenty of water, fighting vermin or providing remedies for sickness, or whatever else it may be, simply "Don't."

When at an exhibition you see your birds defeated, and in your opinion wrongly defeated, and you feel inclined to "kick;" when you hear your rival boastfully crow over victories, which he never won or won unjustly, and your lips begin to form an indignant protest; when you have won, and justly won, over your competitors, and are tempted to boast of your victory; "Don't."

It is better to suffer in silence and be strong than to disclose a weakness by protests and "kicks." It is better to conceal your elation in success than to humiliate your defeated rivals. It never pays to cherish a grudge. It is unwise to "put off until tomorrow what ought to be done today." In contests one should be a thorough sportsman; in doing every day duties, however humble or disagreeable, one should be prompt and courageous. In all business transactions promptness is a cardinal virtue, and strict honesty an absolute necessity.

News Notes

In the department, Announcements of Poultry Shows and Specialty Clubs on another page, there appears a news item that is of special interest to all poultry associations, their members and exhibitors. An organization has been formed that will be known as the International League of Poultry Show Associations and the plan is to accomplish many desirable objects and needed reforms. Poultry associations everywhere are urged to join the organization.

There has been a great demand for information regarding the Indian Runner Duck, but its breeders and friends have been unable to refer inquirers to any source where helpful knowledge could be obtained. Mr. C. S. Valentine has recently overcome this drawback by writing a very helpful book telling all about these popular favorites of the duck family. The price of the book is 50 cents and all orders sent to Successful Poultry Journal will receive prompt attention.

The Five Acre Poultry Farm Contest, conducted by the Missouri State Poultry Board, has closed and the prizes have been awarded. Over 200 plans for ideal plants were submitted by breeders living in 19 different states. The best ones will be incorporated in a bulletin to be issued later. We understand that copies may be obtained free by writing to T. E. Quisenberry, secretary, Columbia, Mo.

CRUSADER III

For years the eggs I have been sending out have been "making good." Not only have they hatched well but the chicks developed into high class birds. This has been possible because of the fact that, unlike many breeders who have a few good birds, my yards contain a host of good birds. I have proved this by going to the New York State Fair on three different occasions with a string of from fifty to sixty White Wyandottes and anyone who was there will tell you I did not take a poor one. Furthermore, Regal White Wyandottes being bred in this Northern Canadian climate and wintered in curtain front houses, are the picture of health and vigor. Why should I not be able to send out eggs that "make good." The following letters from customers prove my statements.

Mr. John S. Martin, Pt. Dover, Can. Lexington, Ky., Jan 26, 1910.
Dear Sir; No doubt you would like to hear of the grand success we had with the birds hatched from the eggs we purchased from you last April. At St. Louis last December we won 1st cockerel in a class of 47, also won Color Special for the whitest bird in the show and A.P A. Gold Medal for the best bird in the show. We have several pullets from same hatch winning 1st and 2nd with them at Lexington in January 1910. With best wishes for your success. We remain, yours truly,
W. E. Johnson & Son.

Mr. John S. Martin, Pt. Dover, Ca. Albany, Wis., Dec. 30, 1910.
Dear Sir; Doubtless you will be pleased to hear of my winnings with birds of your justly famed Regal Strain. Chicks hatched June 22nd won at our show in early December as follows; 1st and second cockerel, 1st and 2nd pullet, 1st pen and special sweepstakes for all varieties of Wyandottes. Although under six months of age my birds were well developed up to standard weight and magnificent color. I am abundantly satisfied with the birds themselves and what they have done for me while your method of doing business and your spirit in every particular are all that could be desired. Wishing you still larger success with the "Regals" in the future,
I remain most sincerly yours, (Rev.) Richard Pengilly.

Mr. John S. Martin, Pt. Dover, Ca. Winona, Minn., Jan 6, 1910.
Dear Sir: I will try and let you know how those eggs I bought from you turned out. I got two nice cockerels and seven nice pullets. At our show I won, under Judge Holden, 1st cockerel, 1st, 2nd and 3rd pullet and 1st pen cockerel scored 94½ with ¾ cut for blueing, 1st pullet 95½ with ¾ cut for blueing, 2nd pullet 95¼ with 1 point cut on weight, 3rd pullet 94½. My pen was the best attraction of the show and they were praised by every White Wyandotte breeder in this vicinity. They were certainly Regals and advertised themselves. Thanking you, I remain,
Yours sincerly, Lewis Lentze,

Mr. John S. Martin, Pt. Dover, Can. Randolph Centre, Vt., Jan. 25, 1910.
Dear Sir: I feel that in strict justice to you and your birds as well as a pleasure to myself I ought to let you know how well I did with the setting of eggs bought of you last April. I got seven sturdy chicks and raised them all, four cockerels and three pullets. As old a Wyandotte Fancier and Judge as W. E. Mack of Woodstock, Vt., said of two of them that either of them was easily worth $25 00, the better one winning 1st Cockerel and Shape Special and the other 2nd Cockerel and Color Special. One of the pullets won 1st pullet, Color, Shape Special and better than that they received more praise and admiration than any other coop of birds in the show. They are all hustlers and great layers, I am well pleased with them.
Wishing you a prosperous season, I remain, Yours truly,
Mrs. D. D. Eddy.

For the season of 1911 I shall mate up 15 exhibition matings all headed by prize winning males and containing all my exhibition females.

The following males will head these pens:

Pen 1. Triumph II. First N. Y. State Fair Cock 1909.
Pen 2. Victor. Second N. Y. State Fair Cock 1909.
Pen 3. Prince Regal. First Ontario Cockerel 1909.
Pen 4. Regal V. First N. Y. State Fair Cock 1909.
Pen 5. White Prince. First New York State Fair Cock 1910.
Pen 6. Regal VII. First New York State Fair Cockerel 1990.
Pen 7. Jack Frost. First New York State Fair Cockerel 1910.
Pen 8. Crusader III. Winner at N. Y. State Fair & Boston 1910
Pen 9. Regal VI. First Cockerel at New York State Fair and the Ontario 1908.
Pen 10. Young Champion. First Cockerel, Madison Square Garden 1910.
Pen 11. Crusader IV. First Pen Ckl. N.Y. State Fair 1909.
Pen 12. Best Son. Second Pen Ckl. N.Y. State Fair 1909.
Pen 13. Silver King. First Pen Cock. N.Y. State Fair 1910.
Pen 14. Fashion Plate. Son of Regal IV; First Boston Cock.
Pen 15. Ideal. Second New York State Fair Cock 1910.

Prices of eggs from above pens are (as they run) $5,00 per 15, $9.00 per 30, $12.00 per 45, $24.00 per 100.

Pens 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, are special matings.

If eggs are desired from these pens only the price is $10.00 per 15, $18.00 per 30, $25.00 per 45, $50.00 per 100.

Book order early. If you are not ready for eggs send $1.00 deposit on $5.00 per setting eggs, and $2.00 deposit on $10.00 eggs to hold your place.

Send 10c in stamps or coin for Regal White Wyandotte Book—the finest book ever published derling wholly with the White Wyandotte. Free Illustrated catalogue and mating list giving complete description of matings for 1911.

Incubators & Brooders

POINTS OF RUNNING INCUBATORS.

Springtime is here, the gay songs of the birds are to be heard in the trees, the buds are putting forth, and all creation seems to take on the enthusiasm that heralds the approach of the gladdest season of the year—spring.

The poultry raiser who is awake to the importance of his occupation also puts on an air of importance, and there is stir and bustle about the premises. If we desire early fall and winter layers, we must likewise hatch them early. When the hens continue, day after day, filling the egg basket with eggs, and none wanting to set, what are we to do, and what is the remedy? Thousands are solving the mystery, and every train is carrying here and there, incubators by the thousands.

With the advent of the incubator the poultry business has taken on fresh interest. It is practically the only way in which we can control the hatching season and have chicks when we wish them, as well as in the proper number and supply.

Too many persons are deterred from buying machines from a too common error, viz: that it requires an expert to operate them, when in reality, some incubators practically run themselves, and all that is required of us is, to keep the lamp filled and trimmed, turn and air the eggs twice daily, and be on hand at the appointed time to remove the chicks. Of course, this is putting it a little strong, but not much either, when we come to consider it.

We will suppose that your machine has been received, and is yet within the crate. Remove it carefully, and follow the instructions in doing so, that every piece may be in its proper place, for unless such is the case you are liable to have much unnecessary trouble that you would not have if you had paid more attention to the printed directions that accompany each incubator and brooder.

We now have the machine up on its legs, the thermometer resting on the top of the egg tray. Make up your mind where it is to set while hatching, selecting a place that is as near regular in temperature as possible. A room in which there is no fire is preferable, for once regulated, the machine is far more apt to continue at the same temperature than if placed where a fire during a portion of the day will raise the temperature a portion of the day, and allow it to decrease at an another.

If you are that fortunate that you possess an incubator house of some material that will not be affected by the heat or cold, then of course all that is necessary is to regulate the machine to the inside temperature of the house or cellar and then you have it for the whole hatch.

One of the best houses we know of is one constructed of concrete, made from lime and gravel and moulded between two side boards of the thickness desired.

But very few poultry raisers are the possessor of such conveniences, and so the next best place is all that we can do.

I have run one of my machines in the dining room for several hatches, and find it a very good place, in fact the best I know of, for there is never any fire there to interfere.

Put your machine where you expect to set it, level it up and fill the tank with water, if a hot water machine, and fill and light the lamp, being careful that the wick is even and true so as to insure a true blaze. Place the thermometer in the position indicated by the instructions, close the door and allow the heat to accumulate within the egg chamber.

Should the door have a pane of glass in it, then you can observe from time to time the condition of the thermometer. Otherwise you can ascertain by opening and closing it as quickly as possible.

When the thermometer indicates a heat of 103 degrees, set the thermometer so that the flue cap will just clear the lamp and not be entirely closed. This will prevent the heat from accumulating in the tank. As the temperature is then shut off to some extent, the flue cap will close down the moment the thermometer registers below 103, and the heat will then enter the tank, which will raise the temperature and cause the flue cap to raise, allowing the excess temperature escape by way of the chimney.

Allow the machine to continue along in this manner for twenty-four hours to make sure that it can be trusted after the eggs are put in.

Do this as quickly as possible, removing the egg tray and closing the machine while doing so, placing the tray on a convenient place, or on top of the machine, if there are no bars in the way.

Select eggs as even as possible, placing them on their side and as closely together as you can, so they will lay quiet and not move. Give the incubator just as nice eggs as you would the hen, if you expect the same results. Some people set the hens first, selecting the best, and what remains are given to the machine, which is a very unfair test.

Replace the filled egg tray within the egg chamber, close the door and let it be for several hours. As soon as the tray of cool eggs are in, the temperature quickly goes down until the thermometer refuses to register, and it is here that so many inexperienced poultry raisers fail. They do not stop to think that this is but the natural consequence. The lamp is then turned up as high as possible and the regulator is tampered with, and very soon the heat has returned, and the cap refuses to open at the proper degree, the heat continues to increase on the inside, and soon we have a batch of cooked eggs, and the incubator condemned, the maker branded as a fraud, and many a would be poultry raiser has quit the business as a result of such an unnecessary failure.

When the temperature begins to go down, after the eggs are placed in, pay no attention to it for six to ten hours, for it will take that long for it to recover.

If you have the regulator set at the proper place, the cap will open at the time and everything will move nicely.

Begin turning the eggs on the third day, it being not only unnecessary to do so before this, but it is very injurious to do so any sooner. The eggs need to remain quiet, and the temperature at the same notch, until the germ is well started.
remove the egg tray and turn the eggs, allowing the tray of eggs to remain outside the machine for ten minutes to cool and contract.

I turn my eggs by hand for two reasons, I use a machine that makes it necessary, and for the reason that I believe that is the natural way. We are following after the method of the hen when we do so. I do not operate a machine with a patent turner. It is very beneficial to the eggs to move them about with the hand, it gives exercise to the embryo

One Gallon of Oil—and One Filling of the Lamp to a Hatch—That's THE X RAY INCUBATOR Way

Here's the only incubator that cuts down the flame when the egg-chamber gets too hot. All others let the flame burn at the same height, then let the excess heat escape. That's why the X-Ray uses only one gallon of oil to a hatch, while all others use 3 to 5 gallons. We place the lamp underneath, in the center. That's why we get absolutely uniform heat throughout the egg-chamber—no cold side as on side-lamp incubators. Thermometer tests prove it. And our lamp holds 4 to 8 quarts of oil. Fill it once and you never need touch it till the chicks are hatched out. You know what that saves, no mussy, smelly work every day—no disagreeable oil can to handle. One filling of the lamp and one gallon of oil—to a hatch—that's the X-Ray Incubator Way. The X-Ray principle means

Better Hatches—Less Expense—No Worry

—and sure success. The X-Ray opens from the top. The lid has two double-glass panels. You can see the thermometer any time without raising lid—no danger of chilling the eggs. You can ventilate or turn the eggs by simply raising the lid. No sliding heavy drawers out, no danger of breaking eggs. The X-Ray is heated to hatching temperature in 15 minutes—others take from 4 to 8 hours. Even the X-Ray Thermometer is different and better than others. Get our book first, then let us send you an X-Ray, freight prepaid, to try for three hatches. See how it's made. chick, for this is the only exercise it gets in the three weeks time.

Cooling the eggs also exercises, as heat and cold expands and contracts the shell, and is very helpful to the chicks. As the hatch progresses the time for the eggs to remain out of the machine can be lengthened, until they may remain out for thirty or forty minutes, depending of course on the temperature of the room in which the machine is located. At the end of the eleventh or twelfth day it is then safe to make a test of the eggs to see what per cent are fertile, and those that are unfertile should be removed at this time, as they only take up the room of those that are fertile and are seriously in the way. Some poultry raisers set a couple of hens at the same time and when this testing is done, the machine is filled up with eggs from the hens, and the machine operates really better with the tray full, especially at the turning time.

The turning should be done night and morning, every day, and at the same time the lamp should be filled and trimmed, taking care that all soot and cinders be removed. Keep the chimney of the lamp positively clean if you desire to avoid accidents, for a dirty lamp generally is at the bottom of all accidents. Handle the eggs with clean hands, always prior to the cleaning and filling of the lamp, as coal oil is very injurious to the egg, as is all grease. One drop on the shell will soon spread over the entire surface, the result being the egg will appear at the end of the hatch with a chick in it only partially developed, as it dies at the time you exclude the air from it. On the seventeenth day cease to turn the eggs, as the chick no longer needs it.

Keep the door of the machine well closed as soon as the chicks begin to pip the eggs, opening it only at such periods as are necessary in order to remove the chicks that are well dried. Provide a basket lined with a cloth of some sort for the reception of the chicks as fast as they are taken from the incubator.

Some of the essential and important points of successfully operating an incubator are, keep the lamp well filled and positively clean. Cool and turn the eggs regularly, gradually increasing the time of cooling as the chicks develop.

Use common sense and cool judgment in the operation of the machine. Do not become alarmed if the temperature should happen to run suddenly up or down, for remember that such a state of affairs cannot possibly continue for any great length of time. When the heat is excluded from the tank, the degree of heat is bound to come to a stand still, and when suddenly thrown on again is bound to cause it to rise in time, when it goes below the required mark. Do not stew and worry about your machine, wasting sleep over the prospect of a success or a failure. Take cool view of the whole matter, and the matter will terminate rightly, provided of course that you have a machine built to hatch eggs, not simply one made to look nice. I am an advocate of plain, practical machinery when it comes to a hatcher or a brooder.

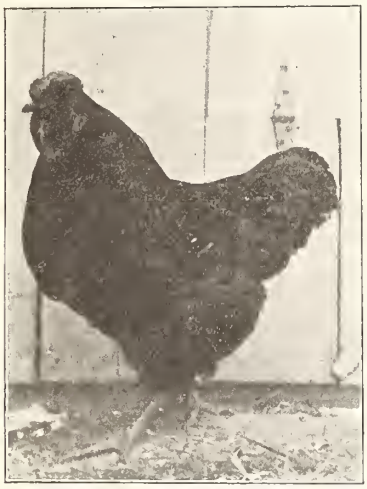
Department of Practical Poultry Feeding

MINERAL MATTER IN THE FOOD IS ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY.

When the breeding stock is deprived of the proper amount of mineral food the egg content will soon be imperfect and the supply diminish. As a result chicks die in the shell or the eggs produce weak chicks. There may be a good egg yield and still an imperfect egg content from lack of mineral matter other than lime. Lack of suitable mineral food may also be a factor in causing poor fertility or even sterility.

Fowls will live and apparently thrive on soils where there is practically no natural grit but under such conditions where grit is not supplied they will eat large quantities of the soft earth. Young stock raised on such soil may be coop-fed or crate-fed for from two to three weeks and keep in good condition with no grit or earth supplied and no other mineral food except that contained in the grain and green stuff fed. Continue the experiment one to three weeks longer, feeding, as far as possible, food containing little or no mineral food and the confined birds will get out of condition and die. A fowl positively deprived of all mineral food will usually die in from one month to six weeks. Mineral food supplied in fine powder form will permit continuing the experiment for an indefinite period, but hard, sharp grit has not been found necessary to life.



PARTRIDGE WYANDOTTE COCKEREL.
Winner of first prize and special for best Partridge Wyandotte male at Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec., 1910. Bred and owned by D. W. McQuiston, Stanwood, Ia.

Between five and six per cent of the fowl's body, including feathers, is mineral matter and should the carcass of a six pound fowl be burned and all the ash saved it will weigh approximately five to five and a half ounces.

Eggs contain between eleven and twelve per cent mineral matter. Of this amount about eleven per cent is the shell and about one per cent is contained in the egg contents and contains all the needed mineral elements needed to perfect a living, hatchable chick. The shell of the egg is mostly calcium carbonate (lime).

The average egg will weigh about two ounces. A good six pound hen ought to yield at least twelve dozen eggs in twelve months—eighteen pounds of eggs in one year. The twelve dozen eggs would contain about two pounds of mineral matter.

The more important minerals found in the fowl's body and in eggs are: calcium, sodium, potassium, magnesium, phosphorus, sulphur, silicon and iron. They are not found in a free state but in chemical combinations as carbonates, phosphates, sulphates, chlorides, etc. Salt (sodium chloride) is an important constituent of the blood. Potassium chloride is found in the red blood cells and in the muscles. Potassium phosphate in the brain and nerve tissue. Calcium, magnesium and silicon in cartilages, bones and feathers; iron in the blood.

Mineral food not only supplies the fowl's body with mineral nourishment necessary to maintenance, repair and upbuilding of the various parts, but it also assists very materially in the active process of nutrition by promoting cell metabolism—the actual act or process by which living cells take up and properly use food material brought to them and reject or throw off waste material and is aided by the presence of essential mineral foods.

It is difficult to make an accurate estimate of the amount of mineral food needed daily by a normal fowl. Not less than two pounds is needed for eggs alone in a year. A large amount of that which is eaten is not usable and must be passed out. The droppings of a healthy hen for one year will yield from eight to ten pounds of mineral matter. The fowl's digestive organs select what can be used and is required and reject the balance.

The average minimum daily intake of mineral food for an adult fowl is about half an ounce, or in one year approximately not less than eleven or twelve pounds.

A failure to supply plenty of oyster shells and cracked bone to laying hens will result in soft shelled eggs and a tendency to egg eating. When a fowl eagerly eats stones, glass and other gritty substances it is striving to satisfy a craving for some needed mineral food with which it is not supplied. A very small amount of the hard grits is assimilated by the digestive organs of the fowl and serve for little purpose. The fowls should be supplied with plenty of cracked oyster shells, fine gravel or coarse sand, ground bone and mica crystal grit.

Growing chicks need plenty of mineral food to supply the needs of their rapidly growing bodies. They particularly need shells and raw dry bone to supply material for bone making and other tissues. They need sand to supply silicon for the feathers. If the chick is deprived of these, weak legs, slow feathering, crooked breast bones, and other deformities is the result. H. V. Tormohlen.

Women's Department

DRESSING POULTRY.

How many women who think they are cleanly about dressing poultry would eat it that way again, after trying my way. I am wondering?

I once knew a society woman who could pick and dress a chicken and have it boiling in about five mintues. I often wondered how she could give fully one-half of her time to society, but after seeing her dress a chicken, it was no longer a mystery to me. The chicken had the feathers jerked off quickly, was not singed, and she grabbed up a knife and began to cut it up. I jumped clear out of my chair and offered to help her—to singe and wash her chicken for her, but she said it only took a minute and she would wash it after it was cut up. It did only take a minute to cut it up, and she slashed right and left, through the entrails several times, also.

It was washed through one water, after being cut up, as we wash clean, pared potatoes—just stirred about in the water for a second and tossed into the boiling water to emit a barnyard odor while being cooked that was anything but appetizing.

I want you to try my way of dressing a chicken, and see if it does not taste better. After scalding the fowl so that the wing feathers pull readily, lay it on a flat surface (to save backache) and beginning at the back, you can quickly rub your hand toward the head and remove the bulk of the feathers with a few rubs. They are much more easily and quickly rubbed off than picked off. After picking the few remaining strays, singe the fowl well, with a crumpled up and lighted newspaper. Never mind if it does get blackened. (I used to be afraid to singe them thoroughly, for fear I could not get the black all off again.) Place the fowl in a dish pan with a little warm water and wet it and a cake of good soap in this water; lift out of the water and soap and lather the fowl as you would your hands if they were very dirty. Rub it thoroughly all over and note the black lather. Lay it back in the warm water and thoroughly rinse off all dirt and soap. Get a second warm water and repeat this process and you will usually get a second dirty water. Then rinse thoroughly in several clean waters and you have an article clean enough for anyone to eat. It will need no scraping, but is ready to cut up. After removing the feet, and part of neck the axe discolored, cut into the fowl carefully and remove the entrials. Don't slash right and left, and into the entrails, as so many do.

A very cleanly aunt of mine told me to wash my poultry with soap (when I was quite a young girl) and I thought that was a queer thing to do, to wash meat with soap, but after considering that poultry dust in the ground and get dirty. I tried it, and have been "passing it along" whenever I find occasion, ever since. It has several times gotten me into trouble, and once gave me the name of being "nasty nice," for soap was made of "dirty grease." One lady told another of my method, and she said: "Oh, dear! Does she wash her beefsteak, too?" I sent her word that I sometimes washed my beefsteak. I invariably look beefsteak over carefully, in a good light, and have found so many bunches of hair and strawy manure on it, that after picking off so much, I did not consider it clean enough to eat without washing and rinsing it nicely and drying it on a soft, white cloth—when I am sure it is far more fit to eat than when taken from the paper and put right into the

Let Chas. A. Cyphers Save You 50% On A Standard Buffalo Incubator

NO OTHER incubator in the world will give you half the service that you can get out of mine. And what is more, mine costs you but half as against any other. I actually save you 50% in money, 50% in time, and 100% in repairs. You do not have to spend one cent for upkeep. My incubator is built to wear and give lasting service. And 250,000 poultrymen who use my incubator will tell you this is a fact.

The Best You Can Get My Standard Buffalo incubator has all the vital principles of the very high priced models. The heat, ventilation, regulation are just the same. The heater is of my regular design and has the added advantage that the thick asbestos insulation is also covered with galvanized iron instead of cotton cloth painted as in others. The ventilation is my well known diffusion method that has made hatchers of my design The World's Standard. The regulation—the lamp—the trays are all of the same high type that all my incubators have ever carried—the kind known the world over.

Why I Save You Half Because you pay only for incubators. You don't have to pay for fancy literature and embossed letter heads and booklets. You don't have to pay the salaries of a lot of useless officers. You don't have to pay the rent and maintenance of a string of bank and executive offices. You buy from and deal only from me. I give you every advantage. I charge you my cost of the incubator plus a small fair profit, that's all. Poultrymen all over will tell you of the Cypher's square deal And if they can save money and time you can.

The Crystal Springs Poultry Co., Oil City, Pennsylvania, markets 75,000 ducks and chickens per annum. The following letter from them speaks volumes:

"Have just completed a hatch with the Buffalo Incubator, and beg to advise you that it is the largest per cent. of fertile eggs taken off this season—93%.
We have ninety-seven machines of different makes, but the Buffalo is far superior to any of them. It takes less to heat it, is more easily regulated, is scientifically simplified in every respect, and certainly far ahead of any incubator upon the market today. After my thirty years practical experience in the poultry business, I say to you, do not change it. In the Buffalo you have a world-beater."— pan, as so many do. I may be talking to a class of people who do not need these instructions as much as the town people do (and it might be better to send it to the "society" columns of a city paper), but go where I will, I find poultry served up so that I seldom dare order it in hotels and restaurants, and often cannot eat it in private families. Being fond of it, I frequently forget and include it in my order, and perhaps it would surprise some of you to know that we sometimes have the back of a fowl served to us where the knife has not cut within one inch of the vent—and that in the homes of farmers, too. My last Sunday dinner, ordered in a large and popular restaurant, in a very large city, made me remember. I not only got a lot of gravel in my teeth in the dressing, but found several kernels of whole corn and some blades of grass, as well. I seemed to think I would be safe in ordering dressing, if I did not dare to order chicken. But they tell us we are never sure of anything in this world but death and taxes, and I guess that's about right. A friend laughed at my tussle with the gravel and corn and said he had lived at hotels and restaurants all his life (and he was no "spring chicken" either), and had never found anything wrong with the chicken served to him. He asked me how I supposed that corn and gravel got in there, and I replied the "crop" had been cut into and it had dropped back into the fowl, which was not even washed properly before having the dressing placed in it. He said that surely they were not that careless in dressing them, but he was going to know. The next week he went to the back door of his hotel (the largest and highest priced one) in a very large city, where he had been living for some years, and pulled out his watch and timed them. He reported to me that from the time the darkey caught the chicken in the coop, until it was in the boiling water on the stove was just three minutes.

The darkey caught it by the head, twisted its neck and tossed it into a kettle of hot water inside the door. A man took it out, and with three or four "swipes," had all the feathers off that were taken off, and tossed it onto a block where a man with a cleaver cut it through and through with four or five strokes and tossed the meat into a tube of water, and what was left of the entrails went into a pail beside the chopping block. The next person washed it from this tub of water into the kettle. He followed it up, and three minutes saw it boiling in the kettle.

I once overheard one lady tell another that it took me longer to dress my poultry than it did some people, but "no one need ever be afraid to eat one" that I dressed.

Since writing the above, I noticed an article on dressing poultry in the poultry department of a paper of a year ago. It states that after the fowl has been killed and feathers plucked, the carcass should be shaved with a safety razor. If the operation proved as trying to the patience as operating safety razors did to the patience of two men I heard of last winter, the atmosphere would be too highly "contaminated" to insure keeping qualities to the fowl, if to be kept any length of time.

I still believe that if you will try my method you will like the singed and perfectly clean carcass better than one with merely the hairs shaved off. They do not even wash the fowl, as described here, but after shaving and removing the entrails, they tie the neck and legs with narrow blue ribbon (when dressing for private customers).

Prevention and Cure of Disease

DISEASE DEPARTMENT.

Poultrymen should understand the part that food plays in the cases of sick birds in our yards. The articles fed the chicks and hens, the quality, the quantity, the method of feeding, all have a part in the matter we are considering. Food may not only be the entire factor in causation of disease, but often it is behind some of the diseases that we call catching. Let us see when food may do harm to our chicks and hens. This is practical information that should enable us to avoid some of the common diseases.

Do green-bone and meat scraps ever produce trouble? The feeding of either of these to excess is likely to produce irritation of the bowels or rheumatism. These animal foods, if fed when spoiled, have produced some of the cases reported to me of "limber-neck." It is not necessary to have the hens eating dead, spoiling woodchucks out in the brush, but the use of a rotting feed of bone or scraps is enough to give the ptomaine poisoning usually termed "limberneck." The supplying of sufficient quantity of all needed foods enables the chick and hen to do its required work. A ration that is deficient in green-bone or meat scraps has a tendency to cause illness. The birds getting less animal food than they require, eat largely of the other foods, usually corn or cornmeal, and take more than the system can use. This overworks the organs of digestion and excretion. The bird gets over-fat, liver enlarged, and never recovers the tone that comes with perfect health. Many of the cases of "break-down" in middle springtime, are the last stage in the feeding of a winter ration low in animal food. Some of the cases of swollen joints in maturing pullets are due to overfeeding of animal food in the endeavor to force the birds to an early maturity. The hopper method of feeding, now so largely being tried, is doing much to eliminate the dangers of overfeeding of meat. When animal, grain and vegetable foods are always within reach, each in its own hopper, the birds seldom overeat of any single article. Chicks raised under this hopper method show much less sickness than when they had just the mashes and mixtures that were put before them.

A diet made up largely of the foods that heat the body and produce fat in excess is a poor one for growth and egg production. It is also bad from a health standpoint. A pullet or hen that is overfed on corn, and cornmeal, is heavy, dumpish, and subject to digestive diseases. Indigestion, diarrhoea, liver disease, are common troubles in flocks when the corn products are the ruling part of the food ration.

The way we feed has a part in the disease question. Did you never feed cracked corn at nightfall to a hungry flock and when you went to shut up the houses find a cock bird lying dead with purple comb? Yarded birds, fed twice a day, with no hopper method in addition, are apt to overeat at meal times. While death is rare in this way of feeding, yet the overcrowded crop is decidedly against good digestion. Hens should not be allowed to bolt their food and have all they can eat. A well prepared mash, properly balanced, can be safely left before the birds for fifteen minutes, but whole grain, especially cracked corn, should be given in moderation. Cracked corn is bad because it packs close in the crop, the visit to the drinking vessel soon supplies water to swell the grain, and this is followed by some of the reported cases of "crop-bound."

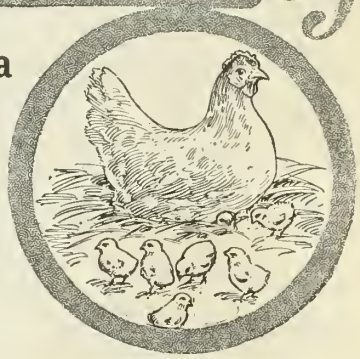
White Diarrhea, Roup, Cholera Quickly and Permanently Cured

The hatching season is now on. The dread diseases of White Diarrhea, Roup, Cholera and Gapes quickly yield to the scientific treatment of Inoculation and your fowls are left strong and healthy. Have on hand the great cure and preventive

"OCULUM"

Registered Trade-Mark



"Oculum Saved Us"

Ten drops of Oculum injected in rectum of fowl will positively and permanently cure. Is absorbed by bowels, quickly passes into blood and inoculates the fowl. A penny's worth of Oculum cures the worst case of Cholera, Roup, White Diarrhea and Gapes.

Oculum not only cures, but is the best general tonic known. It increases the egg yield, keeps down lice, builds weight, beautifies plumage, relieves drudgery of eternal work, cuts down mortality and makes bigger poultry profits certain. Cures turkeys, ducks, pigeons and other fowls.

Hancock Inoculatum Co., Salem, Va.
Dear Sirs:—I have been using your new remedy, Oculum, on some of my valuable birds and it has produced good results. You surely should have a large sale for the remedy when its qualities become known among poultry fanciers.
Wishing you success, I am, truly yours, A. C. HAWKINS.

Hancock Inoculatum Co., Salem, Va.
Gentlemen:—Your Oculum has been given a most thorough test during the past month in treating my poultry. For mild colds, liver and bowel troubles, it is the best remedy I ever used. Oculum will cure chronic cases of Roup, usually considered incurable. I consider it an invaluable remedy that should be in every poultryman's medicine case.
It is a pleasure to recommend Oculum, which is being introduced solely on its merits as a cure for many diseases we have among poultry. Yours truly, C. H. LATHAM.

Ask your dealer for Oculum. If he can't supply it send his name and 25c for trial bottle or $1.00 for large bottle. If it fails to meet our claims we'll refund your money. ing, if fed a ration too highly protein (meat scraps or green-bone), are more prone to catarrh and roup. Old hens fed as indicated are likely to show some form of rheumatism.

Mashes that are too watery produce trouble in all birds, especially in young chicks. It is so hard to mix a mash dry enough for safe feeding that too many persons are feeding a mash that is a source of danger from a disease standpoint. Mash should never be sloppy, but stiff enough to hold its shape when dropped from the spoon. Mash that contains too much moisture hinders digestion, as well as irritates the bowels.

Lack of green food is a prolific cause of anaemia in winter. The birds need clover leaves, cut hay, cabbage, mangels, turnips, etc., to round out the ration for health and eggs. The absence of "filling," such as clover, hay, corn fodder, etc., is as bad for our hens as for the cows. A ration entirely of grain and meat is too concentrated, as well as lacking in the juices of the green food.

Irregularity in feeding is bad. A meal dropped out one evening cannot be replaced by a hearty breakfast the next morning.

WICKSTRUM'S LATEST POULTRY BOOK IS WORTH READING.

Hundreds of our readers have written to P. M. Wickstrum, Queen Incubator Man of Lincoln, Nebraska, for the money-making book he has been talking about in his advertisements. The poultry year is just opening. People are buying their supplies, especially their incubators and brooders, and planning for a money-making year. If you have not written Mr. Wickstrum for his book you had better do it at once. You will find it worth reading. There is inspiration in it.

You may not know Mr. Wickstrum personally, and so we want to assure you that he is not only earnest, but that he knows the poultry and incubator business through and through. He wrote his ideas in such a plain, matter-of-fact way that they cannot fail to be of great help to everyone who reads the book.

The Wickstrum idea about making the poultry business a real business is the right idea. If we could investigate the failures, we would find that nearly all who do not succeed with poultry are people who do not give it the proper attention, do not understand it and do not procure proper equipment in the way of incubators and brooders to insure success and enable them to make money.

The Wickstrum book is "medicine talk" for these people. Possibly you, reader, may not have succeeded as well as you had hoped, and believe it is not your fault. Send for the Wickstrum book, and read it carefully. You will get new ideas. You may change your way of doing some things. You may see that you have been seriously at fault. It will unfold to you the "Wickstrum idea," and that is a point worth while to every keeper of chickens, whether few or many. Better act promptly. Address your request to Wickstrum, Queen Incubator Man, Lincoln, Nebraska, "the place where the best incubators come from."

MATING INDIAN RUNNER DUCKS.

In the first place one should have strong, healthy birds with which to make up their breeding pens.

If mating for color and for the show room, ducks should be chosen that have a nice even color of fawn and white. No penciling in the fawn. The carriage should be fairly erect. It is harder to find ducks that are slim and erect than it is the drakes. The ducks (especially when in laying condition) are fatter and heavier. A poor duck will not lay.

The drakes that head the breeding pens should be erect and graceful in their carriage, and should be good fawn color, not gray, and should be fawn on heads, backs and tails, not green or black. The markings should be clear and bright. A drake that has a line of white running from the neck markings down the breast connecting the white of the fluff should not be used in the fancy breeding pens, for the young ducks will nearly all have the same fault. I once sent to a breeder for a fine drake which he said would score 96 points. When I got him I must say that I was sadly disappointed in the looks of my purchase. He was light fawn and white, but had a white line down the breast. I was just beginning in the duck business and had paid a good price for my drake, so I used him the next season in one of my pens. I mated him to five evenly marked ducks, but a little dark in color, with some penciling in the fawn of body color. From this mating I got a few nice fawn and white birds, but nearly half of them had the white breast line. It takes several years to overcome a fault like that, but it can be done by discarding all the birds that have this fault and keeping only evenly marked birds in the breeding pens. It is the same way with any other fault in color. It can be improved by careful selection in mating up the breeding pens.

We find that they do better and the eggs hatch best where there are not too many drakes in the same yard. Two or three drakes with five ducks each do nicely together. Of course the larger the flock of ducks the more range they need. They should have plenty of exercise and should not be fed too much whole grain.

They should be provided with a dry roosting place. They can stand any amount of cold weather if they can have plenty of dry straw for their feet.

Frozen feet are as bad for ducks as frosted combs on chickens. It does not require an expensive house to raise ducks, just so they can have a dry place with plenty of straw or hay they will do fine. I keep my ducks housed when the snow is on the ground, but they are given free range at all other times during the fall and winter. They are yarded or run in separate pastures during the laying season.

THE INCONSISTENCY OF PEOPLE WHO FAVOR SCRUB CHICKENS.

What is the difference between the mongrel or scrub fowl and the thoroughbred?

Many farmers buy a thoroughbred bull or breed a whole herd of thoroughbred cattle, sheep or hogs, yet when speaking of their fowls they often are heard to make the statement that "scrub" hens are the best layers. In order to get at what constitutes our scrub fowls we must then find out what ancestors are back of them. The scrub fowls are but the result of haphazard crossing of our common breeds of fowls. They have thus the same characteristics inherent in their blood as have the thoroughbreds yet within those tendencies manifested in uncertain proportions. The uniformity which results from systematic mating of thoroughbreds is favorable to a more accurate conclusion as to what the offspring will be than is the case with scrubs. Intelligent poultrymen have for years carried on a system of culling and breeding from those hens only which show a marked laying tendency. This and this alone is what regulates the laying ability of either the "scrub" or of the thoroughbred flock. That this close culling has been practiced with thoroughbreds has given us improved breeds and strains is not doubted. This gives us a reasonable flock uniformity of laying capacity, and with the fancier this uniformity has been carried farther and extends to uniformity of color and conformation as laid down by the American Poultry Association in the Standard. Now the average observing farmer has done no less in weeding out his flock of scrubs. When he wishes a fowl for dinner, does he pick out a hen which he knows as a layer?

Generally he does not. Unconsciously he carries on from year to year a system of selection which tends to eliminate the poor layers. He does not extend his weeding quite so far as does the fancier, as he gives practically no attention to color markings. When he wishes a male to head his flock he keeps his "weather eye" peeled to find a bird that suits his fancy. Does he go far into the interior of the county and pick up a bird ring-streaked and speckled that has been produced by the "scrub" system which he seems to advocate? Not so.

He generally becomes enamored with a lordly cock of thoroughbred lineage. True, he does not take the best the fancier has to offer. Cheapness is his watchword, yet he gets a bird which has been bred along thoroughbred lines. Why does he do this? To profit by improvement which the introduction of this blood affords. Unconsciously he profits by the blood thus introduced, yet he heralds the fact that "scrubs lay better."

Thoroughbred means, literally, carefully bred, and the poultryman who uses care in his operations will find that it pays.

The result of first crosses are generally prolific profitable fowls, yet thoroughbreds carefully mated should excell even first crosses. By first crosses I mean the mating of thoroughbred birds of two different breeds. The mating of a thoroughbred male to a carefully bred scrub stock should give nearly the same result as a first cross of thoroughbreds, but as the male is over half the flock, do not give the credit to the scrub side of the parentage, for this may not be correct. HOW BEST TO SET A HEN.

The briefest answer is—my way. It is generally supposed that any one can set a hen, but "how best to set a hen" is a poser, except as answered as above. I have tried almost every suggestion and have come back at length to practice what has proved best with me. But first you must catch your hen. I use the ordinary full-size cracker box for nests. A strip is nailed across the open side about two inches from the end. This end is placed in the ground. I make all nests the same, both for laying and setting. Take chaff from the hay loft and form it in the bottom of the nest, and about 1 inch deep in the middle; over this place fine hay or soft straw, only a thin layer. When "biddy" inclines to stay on the nest I drop a burlap over the nest and place a board before it, so the hen cannot get out nor others get in. In this darkened nest she stays for the night. In the morning she is offered liberty. If she clings to the nest the burlap is dropped down and nest and all is carried carefully to the barn. An unused grain bin is my hatching room, and the best place I have found. This is inclosed, except the doorway, over which I hang an old horse blanket or heavy burlap. The small grain door is fastened open and muslin tacked over the opening. Here is quiet, subdued light and security from interruption. In this room our candidate for completed motherhood is kept until the hatch is out, except as she is allowed freedom at feeding time to dust in the earth outside. At evening of the first day the hen is removed from the nest and old nesting removed. The box is sprayed with insecticide, sometimes only crude carbolic acid painted around the edges. A new nest is made, as before. Unless fouled, this nesting is not disturbed until the hatch is off. If any eggs are broken or the nest otherwise befouled, only the necessary amount of material to insure cleanliness is removed. Care is had always to retain the general conformation of the nest, after the hen has once arranged it. Our nest being made, the temper of the hen is judged. If she is docile eggs are given right away; if not, she is permitted to "settle down" by degrees. The hen is given a thorough dusting with lice powder at the start, which is repeated twice a day during the second week and at the nineteenth or twentieth day. During incubation the eggs are removed from the nest carefully, the nest is sprayed once or twice, as seems needful, and a thin layer of soft straw or fine hay laid smoothly in and the eggs replaced. Having started our hen on eggs, she is kept on the nest for 48 hours consecutively, when she is let off, always at evening, for feed, etc. The next stretch is also of 48 hours' duration. After the fourth day she is taken off regularly every day for feed, etc.

I feed a mixture of corn and wheat, both whole, and only about one-fourth of the mixture wheat. Water is always fresh. Grit, oyster shell and granulated bone are provided for the "sitters" as for laying stock.

Cracker boxes I find both convenient and cheap—ordinarily they cost nothing. They are a little small for the larger breeds, though I find very little to complain of in this regard. They are easily handled, can be arranged in tiers, and are high enough to afford good air. This arrangement has the further advantage of allowing the hens to get in and out with ease.

When the chicks begin to "peep" no one is permitted to disturb the hen. A basket is prepared, paper placed in the bottom on top of cloth of some kind and a light flannel for covering. The chicks are removed from the nest as they "poke their heads out," placed in the basket by the fire. Unless the eggs are thought of particular value, a chick that cannot get out of the shell is not bothered with. I have tried dipping the eggs in warm water on the twentieth day, and all the other fads, but I find that the old hen has more hatching sense than a whole lot of writers on the subject. As soon as I feel sure that all that will have hatched, the hen is taken to prepared coop, about 2 feet by 3 feet, given her chicks and confined.

Such, in outline, is my method. It is simple. Nothing is attempted in the way of dividing duties with the hen. It is my part to provide for her comfort, convenience and ease of mind if she has any. It is her part to incubate the eggs. I have found only untoward results from over-anxious, inquisitive and imprudent meddling. I have set hens on dirt, on dirt covered with straw, in boxes set on the ground and on a board floor, have set them on boxes on board floor three tiers high, all nests made as above, and have not found any difference, except as against fooling with the dirt. In my experience the moisture problem is solved by the hen.

Further, one person should attend the "sitting hens." They want neither change of attendants nor visitors. They want quiet; not a dark room, but a subdued light; not a warm room, but one guarded against sudden changes; not much air, but pure air; not meddling, but careful, regular attendance.

Questions Answered

In this department each month questions will be answered that are asked by readers. When writing for information please give all details in full or an an intelligent answer cannot always be given. No portion of your letter will be published if the mere statement of the question will answer the purpose. As there are oftentimes good reasons why inquirers do not wish their identity known, we will not publish names, initials or location. Questions are answered by experts in the various branches of poultry raising. Adress all inquiries to Successful Poultry Journal, 355 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Question.—Last year I lost 100 chicks out of 140. The deaths were caused by crop bound. The crop would be as full in the morning as it was at night. These chickens were kept in a brooder and only 20 feet away I had a hen with 11 chicks that were not affected at all. What is the cause and what is the remedy? Part of the chicks were hatched in an incubator and part by hens. The trouble started when they were three or four weeks of age and they were strong and healthy up to that time.

Answer.—It would be impossible for any one to tell you the exact cause of the trouble unless they had an opportunity to observe your methods of care and feeding. The chicks evidently were greatly overfed, but they may have been given too large a quantity of bulky food, such as chaff, cut clover, etc. They may have overeaten something of this kind from the bedding in the brooder. Proper methods of feeding will prevent trouble of this kind.

Question.—I would like to have plans for building a poultry house with scratching shed attached to hold 300 hens.

Answer.—To give you this information would require a lengthy article with several illustrations and the matter could not be handled in this Department. You will find the information you desire in past issues of S. P. J. and future issues will also contain information of this character. If you contemplate building it would pay you to spend 50 cents for some good book on poultry house plans and fixtures.

Question.—I have two breeds of fowls to which I fed the same rations and one breed gives about an 80 per cent egg yield and the other about 20 per cent. Can you tell me why there should be such a great difference? I have a hen which I had in my breeding pen last season and she was a heavy layer, but since moulting this season the first egg she laid was a double yolk one. Do you think it would be advisable to breed from here again? Would inbreeding do much harm for one season?

Answer.—We are unable to say why there should be so great a difference in the egg yield of your two flocks. If the feed, the housing and general care are all equal, the trouble must be with the individual specimens in the flock of poor layers. It may contain a large percentage of old hens that are past their period of usefulness, or you may have a lot of pullets that have not reached maturity or that may not have been brought to maturity under proper conditions of feeding and development. All eggs of normal size and shape laid by the hen you refer to would be suitable for incubation. Inbreeding for one season would not do any harm if the birds are large, well matured, vigorous and healthy specimens.

Question.—I have received the following letter which is similar to the kind that other breeders of different varieties get occasionally. I do not know how to answer such a letter and I would like your opinion on the matter. The letter is as follows: "I want to get two Silver Laced Wyandotte cockerels. I do not care for fancy show stock, but want a couple of good birds. My hens are pure bred. Let me know the weight of a couple that will score around 95 points and your lowest cash price for same. Yours truly, ———."

Answer.—The majority of breeders are in the habit of ignoring letters like the above because they are wholly unreasonable and contradictory and it would seem that there would be little hope to make a sale. This policy, however, is a mistake. The party who wrote the letter evidently wishes to buy two cockerels and the chances are that he will buy them, but he is going to get a little education before he is through with the deal and the breeder who takes the time and trouble to handle him properly will undoubtedly get his order. It is absurd to ask for Silver Laced Wyandotte cockerels that score 95 points because there never was one that honestly scored that amount. It is also ridiculous for a person to state that they do not care for fancy show stock and ask for a 95 point bird of this variety. When letters of this kind are received by a breeder he should not become disgusted and lose his patience, but he should write the inquirer at length and explain conditions in the right way. He should offer the buyer a couple of good breeding birds at a fair price and describe the birds, stating, if possible, what they would probably score. Such a letter might not make a sale, but sometimes it does and the chances are exceedingly good that the prospective buyer will come back to such a breeder and buy stock and eggs after he has been disappointed in not getting his unreasonable demands supplied elsewhere.

Question.—My neighbor's chickens have the habit of standing and picking the feathers off of each others heads and necks and eating the feathers. Is this a disease and if so, what is the cause and cure?

Answer.—This is a habit usually found among birds that are kept in over-crowded quarters and that are not kept busy scratching for most of their food. It is sometimes claimed that a lack of animal food will have a tendency to start the habit among fowls. The best plan is to ascertain, if possible, which birds are the guilty ones and separate them from the remainder of the flock and from each other. Sometimes good results can be secured by annointing the bare places with carbolated vaseline into which has been mixed a little powdered rhubarb or bitter aloes. This disagreeable taste of this ointment will sometimes break the birds of the habit.

Question.—Will you kindly tell me if the kind of food given to chickens has anything to do with killing the germ in the egg and thereby spoiling it for hatching?

Answer.—The character of the food has absolutely no influence upon the germ of the egg. It is popularly believed that the feeding of certain foods, such as garlic, for instance, will very slightly flavor the eggs which can be detected only when they are eaten, but the germ cannot be affected in any way by any kind of food.

Question.—My hens are laying thin shelled eggs and some of the eggs are spotted with white and black. Can you tell me the reason? The birds have the range of the farm and are fed oats and corn with plenty of grit and in extremely cold weather their water is warmed. I would also like your advise about building a brooder house to be used next winter.

Answer.—It is difficult to say what the trouble could be with your fowls unless they are overfat Sometimes certain diseases of the egg organs will cause soft shelled and thin shelled eggs, but it is hardly possible that any great number of your birds would be so affected. The spots on the shells of the eggs may be caused by minute blood clots emanating from bursted veins or they may be simply an excess of shell forming material. It would be necessary for us to see one of the eggs in order to express a more positive opinion. We would suggest that you give your birds a variety of food other than corn and oats. We cannot advise you in this Department relative to building a brooder house because subjects of this kind cannot be intelligently handled except in a lengthy article. There are a number of good books published that give plans and descriptions of all kinds of poultry houses, including brooder houses. We can send you a good book for 50 cents.

Question.—Is there any chance for a cock bird to win in competition with his comb frosted, provided he is an excellent bird otherwise? How much would he be cut for frosted points on comb?

Answer.—If the bird were an excellent specimen in other ways he might easily win over an inferior bird whose comb was not frozen. Very few judges would let a meritorious bird lose in a case like this unless the comb was so badly frosted that the natural form and size of it could not be seen. The cut for this feature alone would be from one-half to two points, according to the severity of it.

Question.—Please tell me how I can have duck and geese eggs successfully incubated in an incubator.

Answer.—The methods of hatching are not radically different from those employed in hatching chicken eggs, but it would be a good idea to write to the manufacturer of the incubator you have and ask him for information regarding the matter. Different "makes" of incubators differ slightly in mechanical construction and the manufacturers themselves are the best authorities on questions concerning their machines.

Question.—Will an incubator work as well in a high dry altitude as in a lower and more moist air?

Answer.—An incubator will work just as well in a high dry altitude as in a lower one, although in many cases it is customary to provide a little moisture in certain makes of machines when run in a high altitude. The moisture problem is a much discussed one. Write to the various incubator companies for their catalogues and you will find the opinions of those who ought to know.

Question.—I have a Black Minorca hen that I recently purchased. She sits on the nest as though she wanted to lay, but she seems to be ill and cannot lay the egg. The parts have the appearance of the yellow of the egg having passed from her broken and in liquid form and a part of the egg organs or something of the kind are protruding from her. I would thank you very much if you would give me any information upon the subject.

Answer.—The bird is probably suffering from Prolapsus of the Oviduct. This trouble is found principally in old hens. It may be the result of overfeeding, too stimulating food, the excessive feeding of egg foods and condition powder, inflammation of the oviduct, constipation or straining to expel large eggs. A large red colored mass protrudes from the vent, becomes inflamed and gangrene may result. Treatment should commence in the early stages of the disease. An examination should be made with a view to ascertaining if an egg has been become fastened in the passage. If this is the case, inject a small quantity of sweet oil and endeavor to remove the egg by pressure. Sometimes it can only be removed by pricking the shell and allowing the contents to escape, after which remove the shell with the fingers. Apply lard or vaseline to the parts and return them by gentle pressure. In aggravated cases the egg may break through the Question.—I have a nice cock bird which has sore feet. I would like to know if you could give me any remedy for him. He has a lump right on the bottom of each foot about the size of a half dollar or not quite as large; it is about twice as thick or about one-quarter of an inch. One has a kind of a scab or hard surface on it and the other is not quite so far along. Is it any thing that would hurt him to use as a breeder?

Answer.—Your bird is afflicted with what is known as Bumble Foot. It is generally caused by constant confinement upon hard floors or runs, or may be caused by the fowl jumping on a hard surface from the perch or other high place; extremely narrow perches will also cause it. In mild cases the bottom of the foot is swollen and is inflamed and noticeably painful. The foot should be held in warm water for fifteen or twenty minutes, keeping the water as warm as the hand can bear, after which apply boric acid ointment, which is made by adding one part boric acid to five parts vaseline. Repeat this once each day for three days and keep the bird confined on soft earth or in a coop with some sort of soft bedding. In aggravated cases,, abscesses form and the swelling must be opened. Soak the foot in warm water as above described, then with a very sharp knige make an X-shaped incision and clean the wound thoroughly with luke-warm water. Dust it with iodoform and apply the boric acid ointment. Bandage the foot with cotton and dress it daily as above, keeping the fowl confined till the wound has healed. A bird with bumble foot is not affected for the breeding pen if the injury does not prevent him from serving the hens. This can be determined only by observation.

Question.—You are probably familiar with the Philo System of raising poultry and I would like to ask your advice about it. I am thinking of starting in the poultry business on a very small tract of land and would like to ask whether you consider the system profitable and practicable. Will the small coops they have contain six females and one male comfortably? I mean the "economy coops" they advertise Where would be the best place to buy a medium priced pen of White Orpingtons. Kellerstrass or Cheviot Poultry Farm?

Answer.—We have never used the Philo system, but we know of some people who are very successful with it and we receive letters quite often from readers who say that it is all that Mr. Philo claims for it. You certainly would not go wrong in giving it a trial. In reply to your inquiry as to where you can get stock of the variety you mention, will say that we can only refer to the advertising columns of Successful Poultry Journal, and you will find a number of breeders advertising therein the strains of White Orpingtons you mention.

Question.—How can one get rid of fleas on chickens?

How much epsom salts should be stirred in a gallon of drinking water for liver trouble in chickens; or what do you consider the best treatment in above disease.

Hens in good flesh die suddenly, fall off roost and are found dead in the morning. Comb and wattles look purplish. What is cause and treatment?

Is boiled whey (from clabber milk cheese) injurious to laying hens?

Please publish recipe for some poultry food or tonic.

How much red pepper should be mixed in a gallon of mash feed to laying hens (one mash meal per day)?

If you can give me a good reply to question No. 1, it will certainly be highly appreciated, not only by me, but many of your Oklahoma readers, as fleas are our greatest pest.

Answer.—What to do to rid the fowls of fleas, depends upon how badly they are troubled. You can adopt as much of the following plans as seem necessary. Dust the birds thoroughly with some good brand of lice powder and do it four or five times at intervals of two days. Provide a good dust bath that the birds will use and that they can easily reach. Spray the interior of the house well with some good liquid lice killer. Also paint the perches, dropping boards, nest boxes and other fixtures. If the fowls are badly infested and your flock is small, wash each bird just as you would wash white birds for exhibition at a show, but use a good flea soap such as is used for dogs and anoint the head, throat and neck with equal parts lard and kerosene before washing. For little chicks, dust them with lice powder and anoint them as above.

A half teaspoonful of epsom salts is the right dose for each bird. It should be placed in six teaspoonfuls of water. Remedies of this kind should be administered individually. Fixing the water for several birds will seldom produce satisfactory results because some birds will drink too much and others not enough. Epsom salts will not cure liver diseases.

It is valuable only in cases where purging the intestines is necessary. There are several forms of liver disease. They originate principally from lack of exercise, incorrect methods of feeding, and a continued diet of grain, especially corn and other fat forming foods. The disease can seldom be detected till too late to cure it. Treatment is not profitable. The usual symptoms are loss of appetite, sluggishness and a yellowish color in the face.

We do not know why your hens die on the perches at night. A number of diseases produce this result. A post mortem examination of one or two of the birds ought to reveal the cause and enable you to intelligently treat the flock.

Boiled whey is not injurious to the fowls, old or young, laying or not laying.

Following is a good tonic for fowls: One-half ounce each of carbonate of iron, pulverized gentian root, black antimony, mandrake, ginger, flowers of sulphur and powdered charcoal, two ounces of bicarbonate of soda. Mix thoroughly and place one teaspoonful in each quart of soft food.

The less red pepper you feed to your laying hens, the better it will be. People have a greatly exaggerated idea of the value of this condiment. Overfeeding of pepper and other similar things will produce various diseases of the internal organs including liver disease. No harm can result from placing a teaspoonful in a gallon mash occasionally.

Question.—I am building four Philo coops 4x5x5 with two stories, lower floor for scratch pen and upper floor for roost. Would eight laying pullets be too many for one coop and would a small run be any improvement? I have six hens and six pullets and am getting only one or two eggs every other day. I am feeding one quart wheat and oats mixed in litter mornings, noon table scraps, mixed with mash, two quarts, at night; one quart corn and oats. They have green bone once a week, also green food every day, grit shells, charcoal and fresh water all the time. Can I improve on this, or am I not feeding enough?

Answer.—In reply to your inquiry relative to the Phila coops, we suggest that you write direct to Mr. Philo for information regarding the matter. It is always best in a case of this kind to go direct to headquarters. We believe that eight laying pullets would be too many for the coop you mention, but a small runway would help matters. Your birds ought to be laying, with the quantity and kind of food you are giving them, but if they are not overfat, would suggest that you increase the quantity of food about one-fourth.

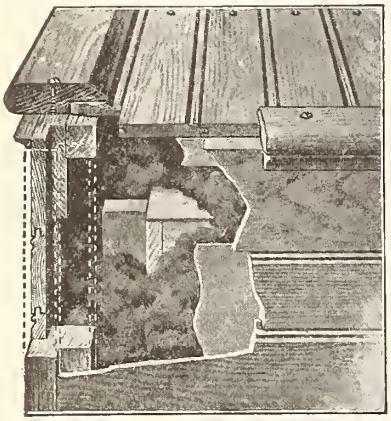
AN INCUBATOR OF QUALITY.

A well-made incubator is something more than a simple box; and it is surprising to know the care, and work, and material, that is put INSIDE the best machines, where it cannot be seen. Take, for example, a single corner of the "Essex-Model" Incubator, of which we give illustration below. It surely indicates



A CORNER OF THE STANDARD ESSEX-MODEL INCUBATOR.

Cutaway section showing parallel case made of chestnut; eight-sided corner post; insulating material tacked to inside of wall; packing material filling space between the double walls; upper corner of the interior egg-chamber and heat-chamber; massive 3-in. band around the top, etc., etc., as described in accompanying article.

Superiority; and the same superiority exists throughout the machine.

The illustration shows a corner of an incubator made of paneled chestnut, tongued and grooved. At the lower left-hand side is shown an eight-sided corner post cut away to show its formation. In the finished incubator it, of course, extends to the top, where the dotted lines are shown. It would be easier and much cheaper to use an ordinary four-sided post, but it would not be nearly as substantial. This is up-to-date construction that accomplishes three purposes—holds in the heat, strengthens the incubator, and gives it a workmanlike finish—a joiner's job. From the outside of the machine you can see only a simple four-cornered post.

In that side of the incubator which is facing you, where the paneling is cut away, you see a smooth-faced piece of material projecting from behind the paneling. That is insulating material tacked to the walls, which helps hold in the heat. It covers the inside of the walls. This insulating material cannot be seen from the outside.

Between these double walls and the egg-chamber there is a space that is filled with specially prepared costly packing. It is fluffy, and forms innumerable dead-air spaces which prevent the heat escaping as well as protecting it from changes of outside temperature. This packing extends all around the machine, and on the top—in addition to which sheets of insulating material are used on the top. In a large machine many pounds of this packing are use. The cost of the packing alone is from a quarter to half the price at which some incubators are sold. This is another evidence of superiority that cannot be seen from the outside.

The upper corner of the heat chamber can be seen projecting through the packing. That chamber, with the egg-chamber, forms a box separate from the outside case. It is like an incubator within an incubator. Two in one. Yet the outside of the machine does not suggest anything of the kind. Many incubators are made of a single box only, and of course they can be sold at a low price.

Do you see the heavy chestnut band around the top of the machine? On an Essex-Model No. 4 Incubator the wood alone would cost about 25c. Then there is labor of cutting, planing, fitting, etc., which with waste, would bring it up a lot higher. Labor, generally, costs more than material. This band is quite an item in the cost of making; but it adds to the stability of the incubator, and is another mark of superiority. It is found on no other incubator than the Essex-Model "STANDARD"—the Incubator of Quality.

Look at the moulding beneath this massive wooden band. It has to be cut, shaped, and nailed. It adds that much more to the cost, and just as much to the value of the machine. It is the accompaniment of quality throughout.

Note the screws that hold the panels and band; screws, not nails. There are actually 79 screws in the top of a No. 4 "Essex-Model." Ask any carpenter how many nails he can drive while putting in a single screw; then you will get an idea how much more this machine costs to make than all others where nails are used. Suppose you can drive five nails to one screw—then the work costs five times as much—but it is part of the work of making a SUPERIOR machine. Some of these machines have actually been through floods without warping, and are now running satisfactorily.

We need go no further than to say that the finish of these incubators is equal to the construction. A hardwood furniture finish that cannot be secured except on hardwood; and that makes this a most desirable piece of furniture, sought after by owners of the most up-to-date country estate, whereon it is a motto that "The Best is None too Good."

Of course the hatching principle, and the certainty of securing many and strong chicks are the first consideration in the manufacture of a machine. At least it ought to be. The splendid construction partially described above is but a means to secure that end.

When you consider that we have described to you but a single corner of this well-known hatcher, you can imagine what the rest is like.

Readers who are interested in seeing illustrations of these Essex-Model "Standard" incubators; or the Essex-Model "Middle-Price" incubators with complete descriptions of their construction, should write to the manufacturers for their free catalogue of incubators, brooders, and poultry supplies. Address Robert Essex Incubator Company, 29 Henry street, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUCKEYE INCUBATORS IN GREAT DEMAND.

Last summer the Buckeye Incubator Co. vacated their old quarters that they had occupied for over twenty years and built an immense modern factory with a capacity of 100,000 incubators. They placed their goods in the hands of dealers in every state in the Union and said, "Now, go ahead and sell all the incubators you can and we'll keep you supplied." In making this statement they never dreamed for a moment that the demand could possibly exceed their output, but they made a mistake. Their little 50 egg machines just took the people by storm and today they are running their mill night and day in an effort to supply the demand. At the present time it looks as though the Buckeye company will be called on to supply something like 150,000 incubators, and when asked about their prospect of keeping pace with the demand, Mr. James Homan, the president of the company, said: "We will fill every order if it takes another mill to do it," and Mr. Homan is a man of his word.

When asked for a reason for the enormous demand for Buckeye 50-egg incubators, Mr. George Cugley, the secretary, replied: "Well, in the first place a 50-egg incubator just suits about 99 out of every hundred people, because of its size, in the second place our prices at six, seven or eight dollars, are within the reach of everybody, and in the third place every incubator we build is sold with an absolute money-back guarantee. Can you stop a combination like that?

The Buckeye company have one of the most unique catalogs we have ever read. It's a straight man-to-man talk and is worth reading, even if you don't need an incubator. This company will also send their two books, "Making Money the Buckeye Way" and "51 Chicks from 50 Eggs," free to any reader of this paper. Address Buckeye Incubator Co., 515 Euclid Ave., Springfield, Ohio.

F. W. C. Almy, Box 55, Tiverton, Four Corners, R. I., has a record on his Rhode Island Reds of 85 prizes at New York, Boston and Providence in 1910 and 1911. This record makes him one of the acknowledged leaders in the breeding of Rose and Single Comb Rhode Island Reds. He is one of the old advertisers in S. P. J. and we take pleasure in calling attention to the fact that he has always given our readers full value for their money and has satisfied them in every way with purchases they have made from him. We have no hesitancy in recommending Mr. Almy and his stock in the highest terms. His prices on eggs and stock are extremely reasonable and his customers can feel assured of getting the best that can be produced in Rhode Island Reds. All who contemplate placing orders this season should be sure to secure a copy of Mr. Almy's mating list before placing their orders elsewhere.

We wish to call the attention of S. P. J. readers to the fact that Mr. Chas. Johnson, 1 Hoyles Ave., Aurora, Ill., is in position to give his customers something extra choice at reasonable prices in Barred Plymouth Rocks, Buff Orpingtons and Rhode Island Reds. His flocks contain the very highest grade of stock and he is breeding from birds in all three varieties that are prize winners and mated for best results. He makes a specialty of breeding for heavy egg production also, and he can more than please all who give their orders. He is selling day-old chicks at 25 cents and agrees to refund money if purchasers are not pleased.

L. F. Powell, Nunda, N. Y., successor to E. E. Miller, has several pens of Buff Rocks mated this season and is in position to send his customers eggs that will produce winners. His flocks contain the blood lines of winning birds at New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Buffalo, Rochester, etc. There is no question about Mr. Powell being able to furnish highest quality both in stock and eggs. Our readers will find it to their advantage to correspond with him before buying elsewhere.

She has some excellent stock for sale also, and will give S. P. J. readers a bargain in what they want.

The attention of S. P. J. readers is called to the ad of Charles S. Thomas, 402 W. North St., Princeton, Ill. Mr. Thomas breeds White Wyandottes and Indian Runner Ducks of highest quality. His ducks are true to standard type and have the desirable fawn and white color. They have a record of 200 eggs per year. His White Wyandottes are just as good and our readers who are looking for stock or eggs in his varieties should not fail to write him for prices.

Lester Thompkins, Concord, Mass., has again won first prize on pen in the S. C. Rhode Island Red class at New York this season. This makes the sixth time that Mr. Thompkins has won this prize in six years' showing. He also won first prize on pen in the R. C. Red class at the great midwest show at Chicago this season. Special comment is not necessary regarding the quality of Mr. Thompkin's Reds. There is not a breeder anywhere in America who is better known or who has a better record at America's leading shows. S. P. J. readers who wish to start with R. I. Reds or who want to improve their flocks should not fail to write for Mr. Thompkin's mating list, which will be sent free to all applicants. His address is Lester Thompkins, Box S., Concord, Mass.

COLUMBIAN WYANDOTTES FOR SALE. Scored by Corey, N. Y. Eggs from 20 pens at $1.00, $2.00, $3.00, $4.00 and $5.00 per 15. My birds have fine shape, dark wing, very fine lacing, hackle, grand head, comb and tail. Visitors are welcome. Bring your Judge along. Try a pair of my stock or a setting of eggs and be convinced. Circular free.

Foster's Black Orpingtons
Spring of 1911, - - - - - - $10 Eggs for $4 for 15.
Why are they $10 eggs? Because they are the equal of any $10 eggs in the United States, and all from my celebrated Duke of Kent Strain—the greatest prize winning strain of Black Orpingtons in America. Send a one cent stamp for a 9x12 chromo and the history of this greatest of all winter layers.
FOSTER & JOHNSTON, R. R. No. 7, Ft. Wayne, Ind.
Hon. State Vice-President, American Orpington Club.

TOMPKINS' REDS LEAD THE WORLD
My Claim to the Champions of America Justified By a Clean Sweep at MADISON SQUARE 1908-1909-1910
Where in competition with the best in America I won 1-3 cock, 1-2-4 hen, 1st ck'l, 3-4 pullet and 1st pen.
AT CHICAGO: 1-4 cock, 1-3-4 hen, 1-2 ck'l, 1-2 pullet and 1st pen. Proof conclusive that for the best Reds in America you must go to TOMPKINS.
5000 YOUNG BIRDS FOR SALE
Bred from my best pens containing my prize winning birds. I can please you in price and quality--and again many of the best flocks of Reds in the country have been established by my stock and to-day TOMPKINS' REDS win in almost every big show in the States of the Union. I make a specialty of furnishing both Exhibition and Breeding Birds in both Rose and Single Combs. The quality is proven--The price is right in both old and young stock. Write your wants in stock and eggs. Catalogue free.

"Common Mistake of Beginners"

North Epping, N. H., Jan. 6, 1911.
Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Last season was my first at using an incubator and I made the common mistake of beginners of buying a cheap incubator, made in ——. After I had lost enough time and eggs to buy two good incubators, I awoke to the fact that if I wanted to make a success of the poultry business the best was none too good. Then I bought a Cyphers and I have had satisfactory results ever since. H. H. YOUNG.

"Five Other Different Makes"

Kramer, Ind., Jan. 18, 1911.
Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Have been using your incubators and brooders for the last seven years. Have tried five other different makes. As a result of our experience we discarded all but the Cyphers, because under the same conditions we found they would give us 10 to 20 per cent. more chicks. HILLCREST POULTRY YARDS,

"Tried Several Other Makes"

Fulton, Mo., Jan, 16, 1911.
Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

We have used two of your Cyphers Incubators for three years. We had tried several other makes of lower priced incubators and brooders, but the difference in results made them an expensive luxury. We found your Self-Regulating Adaptable Hovers the best brooding device on the market.
DIEHL BROS.

"Would Vary Seven Degrees"

St. Johnsville, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1911.
Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

We are using Standard Cyphers Incubators and have discarded all others. The other machines would vary seven degrees and we had to watch them day and night, but we can easily run your incubators without having them vary one-half degree and we only have to look at them twice a day, morning and evening. We also use your brooders and are able to raise 99 per cent. of the chicks placed in them.

"When I First Began Hatching"

Nebraska City, Neb., Jan. 12, 1911.
Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

When I first began hatching chickens artificially I tried several kinds of incubators that were on sale, but I could neither hatch successfully, nor raise a profitable percentage in the brooders sold with these machines. As a last trial I bought one of your incubators and since then have had fine success. Then I tried one of your brooders and found it all you claimed it to be. Last year I bought one of your Adaptable Hovers and put it in a box of my own make and it worked fine. Depend upon it I am a friend of the Cyphers Company goods and recommend them to all my friends.

"Two Hot-Water Machines"

Stigler, Okla., Jan. 5, 1911.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

I bought from you last summer one Cyphers Incubator, 240-egg size. At the same time I also purchased two other machines of different makes (hot water) of the same size as the Cyphers. I hatched as many chicks with the one Cyphers machine as I did with both the others, each of which had the same egg capacity as your machine. A. C. STURGEAN.

"Hatched About 5,000 Chicks"

East Hampton, Conn., Jan. 17, 1911.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

I have been using your incubators and brooders for the last four or five years with excellent success. Have run four other makes of machines, but sold them and now have five large Cyphers Incubators. Last season I hatched about 5,000 chicks and sold most of them and never had a sick chick. I have several of your brooders and like them very much. L. A. HALE.

"Tried Several Cheap Machines"

Stoughton, Mass., Jan. 9, 1911.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Four years ago I purchased a No. 3 Cyphers Incubator from a Mr. Whitney of Everett, Mass., who sold same on account of its being too large and I have had fine success with it. I tried several cheap machines cracked up to be the best on earth, but it was all hot-air—either this or leaky tanks! I would not give one Cyphers Incubator for half a dozen of the cheaper kind, in fact would not again be fooled by such "trash" at any price. A. M. LELAND.

TROUBLE-PROOF ROOFS.

Lots of roofs are waterproof, but only at the expense of considerable trouble for painting and care.

Of late years much has been said about mineral surface roofing, and this type of material is coming rapidly to the fore. The experience of buyers of it has been generally satisfactory, and where faults have been discovered the manufacturers have been ready to make good.

Of these roofings Amatite is the best known and has the widest sale. The advantage claimed for Amatite is that it is made with pitch, a material that is absolutely immune from damages by water; and it has, further, the tenacity which enables it to hold the mineral surface firmly in place through all kinds of weather. Not all mineral surfaces are held in place by pitch, and in some cases the surface consequently loosens and washes off. This does not happen in the case of Amatite, however, and as the mineral surface needs no painting, the owner has nothing to worry about. The roofing takes care of itself through all sorts of weather, year in and year out, without any attention or painting or repairs.

Our readers can obtain a sample of Amatite without charge by addressing the nearest office of the Barrett Manufacturing Company, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Minneapolis, Kansas City, New Orleans, London, Eng.

NOTHING SUCCEEDS LIKE SUCCESS.

It is a good many years since W. F. Chamberlain first completed and placed on the market, a combined food for young chicks, and called it "Chamberlain's Perfect Chick Feed." Attention has been called to this excellent feed in these columns for several years. Mr. Chamberlain began to rear poultry on quite a large scale, but found difficulty in procuring just the right food for little chicks; he experimented and fortunately succeeded in producing what has been proved for many seasons to be a "perfect" ration, or food, for young chicks and which is very widely and favorably known all over the country. To use "Chamberlain's Perfect Chick Feed" means that almost all the chicks will be healthy, and turn the balance in favor of the breeder. Note his remarkable egg propositions in another column, and address orders to W. F. Chamberlain, Kirkwood, St. Louis County, Mo.

"QUALITY" WHITE ORPINGTONS.

M. B. Dolson & Son, Geneva, Iowa, the well known White Orpington breeders, have an ad. in S. P. J. that should receive the attention of breeders of this variety. They are breeding the Kellerstrass Crystal strain and find them topnotchers as layers. They are breeding birds of the true Orpington type, paying special attention to size, color and shape, not, however, overlooking the other fine points, and they are producing prizewinning birds that have pleased hundreds of customers this year—and they make no charge for reputation. Write them for prices on stock and eggs.

BUY POULTRY FENCE—NOT CHEAP NETTING.

If you are going to put a fence around your poultry yard why not put in a good one at once and be done with it. A real fence is a pleasure and a good investment while a cheap one is not only a loss in the end, but a positive nuisance at all times. What you want is a strong, durable good looking fence that will wear for all time and won't rust. A fence that while strong enough for general farm use is still closely woven enough to keep the little chickens in and marauding animals out. That is the sort of fence the Brown Fence & Wire Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, have been making a specialty of for some years. A fence that is so strong and stiff you need no top or bottom boards and practically only one-half the number of posts. In other words, a fence that won't sag because it can't sag. A poultry fence with all the strength of a stock fence. These points are of vital interest to the buyer and should show him at once that a fence of this character is by long odds the best and far the cheapest in the end. So why experiment? Why not write at once for their booklet and learn the truth? It's yours for the asking. Address Brown Fence & Wire Co., Dept. 65, Cleveland, Ohio.

EASY TO BUILD YOUR OWN INCUBATOR.

If there was space here we could relate some stories that would make you want to start right off and build yourself an incubator. It's just a matter of getting the right plans—and the rest is easier than nailing a box together or putting up a board fence.

There are 80,000 strong who have used H. M. Sheer's perfect plans shown in his great free incubator book and simply had a picnic building incubators for themselves and their friends, making money on the side, getting immense hatches of big, healthy chicks.

That's a tremendous showing and it proves absolutely that incubator making at home is as delightful as any form of amusement—just as itneresting and absorbing—and just as big a money-maker

"Halbach's White Rocks" ESTABLISHED A BIG RECORD BY WINNING

BEST DISPLAY AT CHICAGO, JAN., 1907
" " " " DEC., 1908
" " " " " 1909

You would be surprised to know, that in addition to winning year after year, birds purchased from me or hatched from eggs I sold, have won at the largest shows in the country. I could mention show after show, where my birds have won the BEST PRIZES, but I honestly believe this honor belongs to the purchaser. So, when you buy birds from me you need not be afraid that I will publish your winnings as mine. For the season 1911, I have mated 15 grand pens. If you want to raise big snow white beauties that will win in the show room and fill the egg basket, let me send you some eggs from my choice pens.

Write for free mating list. Send 10 cents for Art Catalog containing pictures of prize winners and valuable information about White Rocks.

A choice lot of breeding cockerels left at from $3.00 to $10.00 each.

as anything you can turn your hand to by accomplish.

The free book given away by Mr. H. M. Sheer has certainly helped a lot of people to get better incubators at reasonable prices and to get rid of the fuss and worry and fuming around. It's delightful to make them, profitable to run them and a constant source of satisfaction to remember that you have done it yourself and not depended on some one else to do it for you. These plans have certainly helped the entire poultry business. Write for a copy of the book to H. M. Sheer, Dept. 14, Quincy, Ill.

REMEDY FOR WHITE DIARRHOEA.

With the coming of the hatching and brooding season, poultrymen will be pleased to know that in Oculum, a remedy has been found for white diarrhoea, cholera and roup. Oculum, manufactured THE HANCOCK INOCULATUM CO., Box C, Salem, Va., is receiving the testimonials of the leading poultrymen of the nation. Breeders, such as C. H. Latham, P. J. Armstrong, U. R. Fishel, A. C. Hawkins, William Ellery Bright and others, have, after a thorough test, given fine testimonials as to Oculum. These breeders handle hundreds of birds and know the value of Oculum. Oculum has been before the public several years, and its reputation is growing rapidly. Our readers will be glad to hear that these dreaded diseases can be combated, and should find out more about Oculum by addressing the manufacturers. When writing, ask for circular C.

SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

William Cook & Sons, Box S, Scotch Plains, N. J., originators of all the Orpingtons, announce that they will give twenty fifty dollar silver cups during the coming show season to advertisers of the Cook strain of Orpingtons or to those who have purchased eggs or birds from Cook & Sons. These cups will be competed for at different shows and all breeders who are interested should get the secretary of their show to write for the cups. Cups have already been promised at the following shows: Philadelphia, Pa.; Knoxville, Tenn.; New Orleans, La.; Dallas, Tex.; Hamilton, Bermuda. There will be strong competition among those who are fortunate enough to have the Cook strain of Orpingtons. Their object in offering valuable cups is to show their customers that they are interested in them. The plan will also be of great value to their customers in an advertising way. It is the intention of this firm to increase the number of cups offered each year.

RED RAVEN REDS TO THE FRONT.

Who ever heard of any breeder of R. I. Reds making the record recently made by J. G. Buddle, of Oak Park, Ill., on his Red Raven Strain of S. C. Reds? He entered nine birds at the Madison Square Show and seven of these were in the money; and he entered nine birds at the Boston Show and all nine were in the money. Here he also won four specials, including the Grand Challenge, $100 silver cup for best cock, both Rose and Single Comb competing.

Also silver cup offered by R. I. Red Club of America, and shape special on male, in competition with the best Reds in the east, and again at the Cleveland Show he had eight out of nine birds entered, inside the money, winning first pen; first hen, color special on hen; second and fourth cocks.

We believe that this record has never been equaled by any R. I. breeder in the country, and to those who are familiar with the high quality of the Red Raven Strain, which Judge Zimmer has carefully bred into them in the years past, are not surprised that they should go out and make such a reputation for themselves.

Mr. Budde is just issuing one of the handsomest and most valuable books on R. I. Reds that any breeder of any variety has ever attempted to put out. This book gives the origin and history of the R. I. Red, together with much valuable information regarding the mating and showing of R. I. Reds, and tells many of Mr. Budde's methods of how he produces and conditions his exhibition specimens.

As we said before this book is one of the most handsome and most artistically gotten up catalogues that has ever been published and all breeders of R. I. Reds will be able to gain some valuable information by reading it. Send ten cents to help cover cost of mailing and address J. G. Budde, Box E, Oak Park, Ill.

Will D. Kimball, Pine River, Wis., is offering Buff Orpington stock and eggs to readers of S. P. J. that will surely please the most particular customers. Mr. Kimball has made an excellent record in the show room and the prizes won by him this season at Oshkosh, Wis., and the big Milwaukee Show are ample evidence of the superiority of the birds in his yards. He has several pens mated this season, the eggs from which are sure to produce winners and his prices are reasonable.

Our readers who are interested in White Orpingtons will find it to their advantage to write to W. S. Day, Lakeland, Minn., in regard to any stock or eggs which they intend to purchase. Mr. Day is breeding White Orpingtons that are good enough for any breeder and he guarantees to please his customers. At the recent show of the Northwestern Poultry Association at Menominee, he won first on cock and second on hen.

Among the advertisers of Partridge Wyandottes whose ads appear in S. P. J. is Mr. J. Lyman Kelly, of Malone, N. Y., and there is not a breeder anywhere who is in better position to furnish quality to his customers. Mr. Kelly's birds are noted for size, shape and distinct penciling. At the Utica, N. Y. Show this season he won 1st cock, 2nd hen, 1st cockerel, 1st and 4th pullets and 1st pen, which is an excellent record at this big show and which ought to convince intending purchasers that Mr. Kelly can fill any orders for eggs satisfactorily.

EGGS, SPROUTED OATS, EGGS

DOUBLE QUICK GRAIN SPROUTER

Sprouted oats are the greatest egg food known. For an abundance of eggs as well as for the highest per cent of fertility, there is nothing that equals them. Germinating gaains contain the active Principle of Life, hence they stimulate egg production aud chick growth. As a forcing, yet natural, food there is nothing so good for the growing chicks. Thousands testifiy to the high efficiency of the sprouted grains, but the difficulty has always been in the trouble and muss to sprout them. But this is now easily and quickly done, winter or summer, by the Double Quick Grain Sprouter. Sprouted in 24 hours and 4 to 6 in. high in so many days. Nice piece of furniture. May be used in kitchen, cellar feed house, or any kind of shelter.

Makes 2 to 4 bushels of feed from 1 of grain, the cheap feed secret formerly advertised for $1. Soon pays for itself in the increase egg yield and the feed it grows. The most valuable invention in years for the poultryman. Five minutes or less to take care of it. Sizes from a few hens to 500.

CLOSE-TO-NATURE COMPANY, 41 Front Street, Colfax, Iowa.

Amatite ROOFING

No more paint for me! I've now covered every roof on my place with Amatite.

TO buy a roofing that requires painting is inviting trouble.

Painted roofings are as out of date as the harvester machinery of thirty years ago.

The roofing of to-day needs no painting. That's one of its great features.

If you are still using the "old rubber kind," the kind that requires painting every year or two to keep it tight, we want to tell you about Amatite; why it needs no painting; why it wears longer than the "smooth surfaced" roofings, and why it costs less.

First — Its chief ingredient is Coal Tar Pitch—not a "secret compound" but a well known, long tested material, recognized by engineers as the greatest waterproofing material known. Two layers of this material are used in every sheet of Amatite.

Second--We use two layers of the best grade of wool felt to hold the pitch in place. This wool felt gives tensile strength to the roofing, and is the best material known for that purpose.

Third---On top of these four layers is a real mineral furnace. This surface requires absolutely no painting, and adds materially to the life of the roofing. It is fire retardant. It is permanent.

FREE SAMPLE

We want to send you a sample so that you can see what a solid, substantial waterproof roofing Amatite really is. Write to-day. Address nearest office.

ANNOUNCEMENTS of POULTRY SHOWS SPECIALTY CLUBS

BEAVER, PA.

The Beaver Valley Poultry Association held their annual exhibition January 11-14, 1911, and it proved to be the most successful of any of their shows. There were about one thousand birds, all poultry, and were displayed in a neat and sanitary manner in Empire coops.

The members of the association met on Friday evening of the show and selected their dates for next year as January 10 to 13, 1912, and will secure two of the best judges to place the awards. J. Mays Ecoff, Beaver, Pa., is secretary of the show.

INTERNATIONAL ANCONA CLUB.

The annual meeting at the Hollenden Hotel, Cleveland, O., Jan. 27, was called to order by President Sheppard. The secretary being absent, Robt. A. Tierney was appointed acting secretary.

A large number of active and enthusiastic members were present, the membership having more than doubled in the past year.

The exhibit of Anconas was conspicuous in the big Cleveland show, the entry being very large and all classes well filled. The quality of the birds demonstrated what a grand improvement has taken place in this handsome and profitable breed in the past few years.

H. Cecil Sheppard was re-elected president, and Jno. W. McNary, Bannock, O., was elected secretary-treasurer.

EASTON, PA.

The fifth annual show of the Easton Poultry Association will be held Jan. 8 to 13, 1912. It wil undoubtedly be a good one as usual. S. W. Godley is secretary of the show.

KENT CITY, MICH.

A poultry association has been organized at Kent City, with 122 names on the membership list. A big show will be held Nov. 27 to Dec. 1, 1911, with R. V. Otto as judge. Rev. J. W. Hayward is president of the association, and Wm. Burrows is secretary.

WOODSTOCK, ILL.

The second annual exhibition of the McHenry County Poultry Association will be held in Woodstock, Ill., Jan. 3 to 8, 1912. The first was a grand success and this one promises to be a bigger one. E. L. Hayes is secretary.

AMERICAN HOUDAN CLUB.

The American Houdan Club held its annual meeting at the Boston Show, Jan. 12th, 1911. The report of the secretary-treasurer was read and showed that the club was in a prosperous condition. Houdan breeders generally are taking more interest in the club, the membership at the annual meeting being 126, and on February 1st, the membership had grown to 137.

The club work for 1911 was discussed at the meeting, and it was decided to make this year a banner one for the Houdan, and for the club. Special ribbons will be offered at practically every show where we have members, and club cups at all the larger and more important shows.

The results of the mail vote for the election of officers was reported as follows: President, John T. Heizer, Columbus, Ohio; vice-president, Dr. Geo. W. Taylor, Orleans, Ind.; secretary-treasurer, Jas. Abernethy, West Pembroke, Maine;

A. J. KEYSER, BELLE PLAINE, IOWA, AND SOME OF HIS PRIZE WINNING BIRDS.

FOR THE ATTENTION OF MINORCA BREEDERS.

The seventh annual meeting of the International Rose Comb Black Minorca Club was held at Chicago, December 10th, 1910. The meeting was well attended. The secretary's report showed the treasury to be in good condition and the list of members to be the largest in the history of the club. The election of officers resulted in the following selections: For president, C. E. Tobey, Scranton, Pa.; vice-president, R. C. Stewart, Big Rapids, Mich.; secretary and treasurer, Lloyd C. Mishler, North Manchester, Ind. directors, J. Madison Wright, Los Angeles, Cal.; Norman H. Watson, Mystic, Iowa; Thos. G. Samuels, Nanticoke, Pa., and A. M. Moody, Boston, Mass.

The club recently issued a large forty-four page catalogue filled with articles from those who have handled Minorcas. We are anxious to get this catalogue into the hands of everyone interested in Minorcas. It will be sent on request whether stamp is sent or not, but if you have a two-cent stamp handy it will be appreciated. For catalogues or information concerning the club, address Lloyd C. Mishler, North Manchester, Ind.

NOTICE TO ALL POULTRY ASSOCIATIONS.

A meeting of representatives from various show associations throughout the States and Canada met at Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 2, during the Great International Show, and approved the report of the committee which was appointed at the Madison Square Garden Show to draft a constitution and by-laws for the new organization, to be known as the International League of Poultry Show Associations.

The following temporary officers were elected to hold office until the constitution and by-laws receive ratification by all the show associations which are desirous of joining as charter members before May 1st, 1911: President, Robert Seaman, Jericho, N. Y.; vice-president, T. E. Quisenberry, Columbia, Mo.; secretary-treasurer, Dr. S. A. Merkley, 1807 Seneca St., Buffalo, N. Y.; executive committee, C. D. Cleveland, West Orange, N. J.; L. G. Jarvis, Grimsby, Ont.; H. D. Riley, Philadelphia, Pa.; E. J. Sweetland, Jamestown, N. Y.; Theo. Hewes, Indianapolis, Ind.; W. B. Atherton, Boston, Mass.; election commissioner, Charles H. Ward, Bethel, Conn.

There were 33 show associations represented at this meeting and all were very enthusiastic in their predictions that much good could be accomplished through this new organization, which will become a member of the A. P. A. and work in harmony for the advancement of poultry shows, both great and small, and in every way possible advance the poultrymen's interests.

One of the first problems for this association to tackle will be the exorbitant express rates on poultry. To accomplish anything in this line it must be through the organized effort of the great majority of the show associations of the country. Some other objects are, to avoid conflicting show dates, simplifying the rules, protecting each other, standardizing the entry blanks, tags, etc.

Any show association in the United States and Canada can become a member of this association by signing the application blank and returning it with the required fee to the secretary and receive the approval of the executive board.

The secretary was instructed to have printed, copies of the constitution and by-laws and other matter outlining the work which this new association expects to do and not talk about it for several years.

Other meetings agitating the organization of this new association were held at the Empire Show, Grand Central Palace, New York City, Nov. 22, 1910; Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 14, 1910, and Madison Square Garden, New York City, Dec. 29, 1910.

Copies of the constitution and by-laws will be ready March 1st, and all show associations that are desirous of obtaining a copy and other information should write at once to Dr. S. A. Merkley, Secretary, 1807 Seneca St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Column of Smiles

All summer long the barnyard heard
The turkey's brag and boast,
And now they're glad that bumptious bird
On all sides gets a roast!

School Teacher—Albert, what is there in the glorious holiday of Thanksgiving that especially appeals to every loyal American heart?

Little Albert—The turkey and pumpkin pie.

That hard boiled egg gave me a headache. You shouldn't eat hard boiled eggs. I didn't eat it. A fellow hit me with it behind the ear.

Henry came home furious last night.

What was the matter, daughter?

Why, mamma, I had put two eggs in his luncheon and forgot to cook them.

Young Husband—Are my eggs done yet, darling? His bride (in tears)—O, Jack! I have boiled them for an hour and a half, and they are not soft yet.

A dude, who was visiting friends in the country, complained of the eggs. "They seem," said he, "lacking flavaw, compared with our city eggs; they are rathaw insipid, aw!"

"They say a carrier pigeon will go further than any other bird," said the boarder between bites. "Well, think I'll have to try one," said the landlady; "I notice a chicken doesn't go very far."

"Do you know," said the boarding house mistress to the star boarder, "that a flock of geese once saved Rome?"

"I can well believe it," was the reply, "and I think this goose must have been one of them." And he resumed his sawing in a vain effort to cut off a piece of the breast-meat.

First Hen—"What a ridiculously giddy creature that young Miss Dorking is."

Second Hen—"Oh, she's young yet. Wait till she has known the sorrow of sitting for three weeks on a china egg and two doorknobs—she'll sober down then."

"I have a great respect for gray hair," said the humorous boarder as he raised his eyes from his plate.

"That's very creditable of you, Mr. Jellaby," said the landlady.

"But I have no respect," said the humorous boarder, "for gray feathers!" And he tapped viciously on the tough fragment of turkey that lay before him.

Column of Thoughts

If you cannot keep your friends without lying to them, let them go.

It is some men's luck never to be caught when they want to be.

If a man hasn't a fad the chances are he has something worse.

The most expensive proposition in the world is a cheap man.

The less money a man has, the harder it is to make people believe he has that much.

The people who have money to burn are not the ones who kindle the fires.

No rule will work in the hands of a poor workman

The man who has friends isn't nearly so apt to need them.

There are any number of persons who can run other people's business better than they can run their own.

It is a rare thing to find a person who is not ashamed to acknowledge his faults.

It would require a stick of dynamite to make some people sit up and take notice.

The innocent may be blessed, but they have a lot to learn.

There is no fool to compare with the one who thinks he is wise.

If there was only some way of knowing who our real friends are.

If only beauty and common sense came wrapped up in the same package!

Many of us remember the things we ought to forget and forget the things we ought to remember.

The man who keeps on good terms with his conscience, his wife and his stomach is apt to be happy.

The school of experience is the one from which but few of us can play truant.

If a feller's inclined to try, I say
There isn't a shade of doubt
But that he can change bad luck to good
By turnin' it inside out,
An' upside down, with the right side in,
And maybe turn end for end;
The principal thing is to try and try,
An' never give up, my friend.

PARRISH STRAIN
Columbian Wyandottes

The past season I furnished birds that won the blue in New York, Indiana, Illinois, Massachusets, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Washington, Iowa, Arizona and nearly every state south of the Ohio river,

At the Tennessee State Fair show, September, 1910, which was pronounced the largest as well as of the highest quality in its history, in an extra strong class of Columbian Wyandottes I won first pen, first cock, first and second hen, first, second and third cockerel, first, second, third, fourth and fifth pullet.

If you want a show bird or breeders you can do better here than elsewhere.

Write for catalogue.

"Ringlet" First Prize Exhibition Pen and Winners of Sweepstakes Silver Cup at Madison Square Garden, New York.

"RINGLETS" SET THE SEAL OF CHAMPIONSHIP

AT THE IMPERIAL SHOW OF ALL AMERICA, MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, NEW YORK THIS WINTER OF 1910 AND 1911

E. B. THOMPSON'S BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS win as follows:

First prize on cock, first and third on Cockerels; first and second on Exhibition Pens; the Imperial Prize of the show, special for Champian Male; Diploma presented by the Am. Poultry Association for best Cockerel; special for four best Cockerels; Sterling Silver sweepstakes Cup for best Plymouth Rock hatched in 1910, male or female, any variety, Challenge Silver Cup for best Exhibition Pen, won for third time and final Ownership; special for best pen mated to produce Exhibition Cockerels; special for best colored Male; special for best shaped Male; $25 special prize presented by the New York Show for finest display. Three times as many first prizes as any competitor. More first prizes than all competitors combined. All Silver Cups and Cash Specials.

My exhibit was one of the wonders of the show, every bird wearing the matchless "Ringlet" barring.

My three First Prize Males stood out like Stars.
My First Prize Champion Cockerel is the finest of All time.

This new Championship Record stands monumental above all other records—an achievement far and beyond anything ever hitherto accomplished by any Barred Rock breeder since the New York Show was founded. Furthermore, every Silver Trophy that has ever been offered on Barred Rocks at Madison Square Garden to be won three times has been finally won by me and is now my absolute property. This includes the $100 Challenge Trophy and the $100 Association Cup.

For more than 20 years at New York my "Ringlet" victories have been complete. The "Ringlet" record of First on Exhibition Pen three years in succession is the undisputed champion. My clean sweep of 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th prizes on Pullets has never been approached in Madison Square Garden and stands alone and unequalled.

REGALS IN FOREIGN LANDS

CRUSADER III. A Boston Winner.

At home and abroad the sterling qualities of Regal White Wyandottes are known and appreciated. Even in "Darkest Africa" their fame is as great as it is in America. The reasons are not hard to find. The Regal Strain was the first to emphasize the fact that shape was of first importance. This was afterwards embodied in the Standard of Perfection. Furthermore Regal White Wyandottes in attaining ideals of type and color have never neglected the utility qualities because it is by these only that any breed can hope to endure. The following extract from the Pretoria Poultry Journal shows what the Regals are doing in South Africa.

EGG RECORDS

"Keeping records of the number of eggs laid is very interesting and the following shows the advantage of keeping pure bred birds of a laying strain. The Wyandotte Poultry Yards, Schoeman St., Pretoria, mated up on May 1st, a pen of three White Wyandottes for their second season and from that date to November 30th they have laid 399 eggs or a total of 133 each in seven months. Two went broody during that period but were "broken" and laid again in eight days while the third was allowed to bring out a hatch of chickens but started to lay when they were three weeks old and is now sitting again. The first two show every sign of continuing their production for some time to come. This pen was purchased from Mr. R. W. Hazell of Rondebosch, in May, 1909, and are from Martin's Regal Strain (Canada). It is needless to say the owner (Mr. H. A. Williams) is very pleased with them and has bred mainly from them this season, having over 100 head of promising young stock which should carry on the laying propensities of their parents. The balance of the eggs from these birds was disposed of locally. The Wyandotte Yards are, however, not the only breeders in Pretoria who have this famous strain, for Mr. A. P. Prentice of Pretoria West, and Mrs. M. C. Bird of Daspoort, have pens from Mr. Hazell, while Mrs. H. R. M. Bourne ordered a pen direct."--
Pretoria Poultry Journal.

For the seaton of 1911 I will mate up fifteen prize pens, all headed by prize winning males and containing all my exhibition females. Prices of eggs from these pens (as they run) $5.00 per 15, $9.00 per 30, $12.00 per 45, $24.00 per 100. If eggs are selected only from pens 5 to 10, which are special matings, prices are $10.00 per 15, $18.00 per 30, $25.00 per 45, $50.00 per 100. Send 10 cents in stamps or coin for Regal White Wyandotte Book, the finest book ever published dealing wholly with the White Wyandotte. Free illustrated catalogue and mating list, giving complete description for matings for 1911.

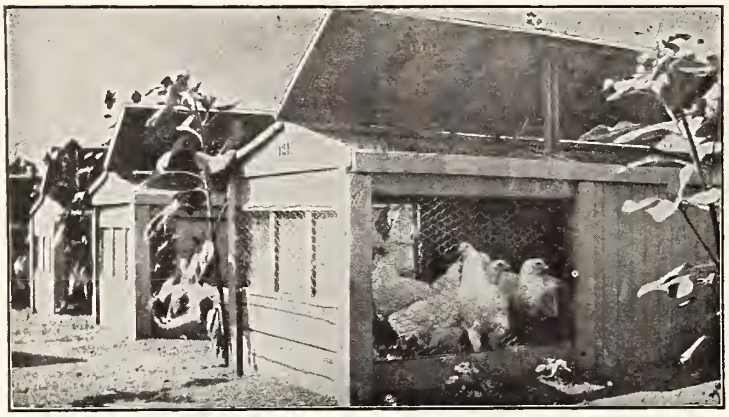
A GOOD LIVING

$1,500.00 from 60 Hens in Ten Months on a City Lot 40 Feet Square



Note the condition of the three months' old pullets at the School Farm. These pullets and their ancestors for seven generations have never been allowed to run outside the coops.

TO the average poultryman that would seem impossible and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden 40 feet wide by 40 feet long, we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practiced by the American people, still it can be accomplished by the

Philo System

The Philo System Is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry

and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success

from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks

are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler without any loss, and the broilers are of the very best quality, bringing here 3 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-Months-Old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each Per Month

in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using.

Our new book, THE PHILO SYSTEM OF POULTRY KEEPING, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell

One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel

Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves 2 Cents on Each Chicken

No lamp required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps, or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Testimonials

South Britain, Conn., April 19, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have followed your system as close as I could; the result is a complete success. If there can be any improvement on nature your brooder is it. The first experience I had with your System was last December. I hatched 17 chicks under two hens, put them as soon as hatched in one of your brooders out of doors and at the age of three months I sold them at 35c a pound. They then averaged 2½ pounds each, and the man I sold them to said they were the finest he ever saw, and he wants all I can spare this season. Yours truly,

A. E. NELSON.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—No doubt you will be interested to learn of our success in keeping poultry by the Philo System. Our first year's work is now nearly completed. It has given us an income of over $500.00 from six pedigree hens and one cockerel. Had we understood the work as well as we now do after a year's experience, we could have easily made $1,000.00 from the six hens. In addition to the profits from the sale of pedigree chicks, we have cleared over $960.00 running our hatchery plant, consisting of 56 Cycle hatchers. We are pleased with the results and expect to do better the coming year. With best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours, (MRS.) C. P. GOODRICH.

FROM POULTRY

The Poultry Review

A Monthly Magazine Devoted to Progressive Methods of Poultry Keeping

The Poultry Review is edited by E. W. Philo, author of the Philo System Book and founder of the Philo National Poultry Institute.

It is edited and printed on a practical poultry farm, where experiments are being conducted and reported in full in the Review. New discoveries and improvements are described and illustrated, and each issue contains a number of letters of experience and suggestion from followers of the Philo System.

Rev. W. W. Cox, our associate editor, is conducting a Philo System Plant, and his "Notes from a Six Hen Plant" in each issue have created considerable interest, and contain much valuable instruction. The first year's work on this plant netted over $500.

In addition to the best original articles it is possible to obtain, a review of the best articles from over a hundred publications is made—the "cream" of the poultry press arranged for the busy reader.

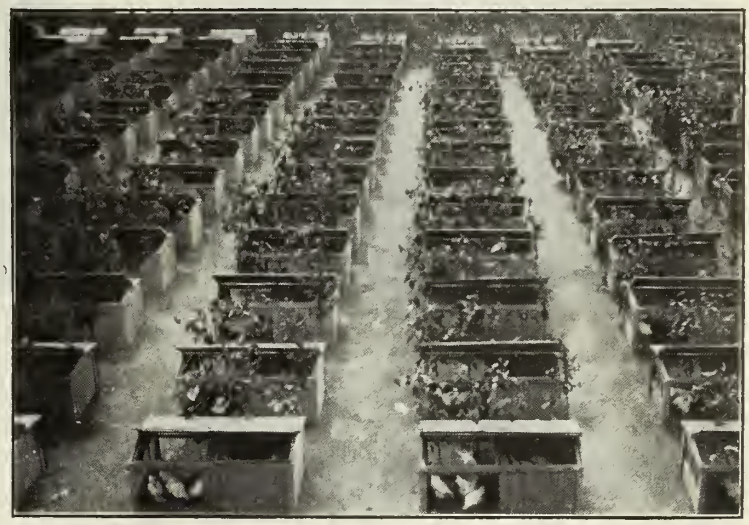

Photo taken from the roof of the Philo National Poultry Institute, showing a portion of the Poultry Plant where there are now over 5,000 pedigreed White Orpingtons on less than half an acre of land.

Another thing that is proving of great value to our subscribers is our Information Department. Our editors are always ready to help subscribers. When any difficult problem arises and you see no way of solving it, write us, and we will give you a prompt personal reply. It is quite probable that we have had a similar experience and can help you. Although no charge is made for this service, it is worth many times the subscription price.

For 1911 the Poultry Review guarantees the largest circulation of any paper of its kind—over 100,000 copies monthly, reaching the best class of poultrymen in every state and over thirty foreign countries.

TESTIMONIALS

E. R. Philo, Publisher Poultry Review, Elmira, N. Y. Box 214, Medicine Hat, Alta., Can., April 16, 1910.

Dear Sir:—Of all the poultry journals I take, I would fail in all rather than in the Review as I really like your paper the best of them all. Now I do not say this to curryfavor, nor for any other purpose, because I really like your paper for the pithy and sound articles. There is no dry reading in it as there is in other poultry journals, such as accounts of poultry shows that do not really concern any one but those who are written about. I do not think that any one in any part of the country cares who wins and who does not. It is all right in a local show, written and published by a local paper. Well, success and great success for the Review, and I hope to receive it regularly in the future.

Very sincerely yours,
R. G. Wetmore.

A Little Poultry and a Living

Is the title of a booklet we will mail free. It was written by the author of the Philo System book, who makes everyone of his hens pay him a proft of $50 to $100 each

Cycle Brooder Hatcher, a complete all metal, fire-proof hatching and brooding plant for only $8.00.

The All-Metal, 50-egg Cycle Hatcher only $6.00, complete.

Our New Discoveries Make Poultry Keeping Easy and Profits Sure

Our machines were used exclusively in the original Philo System plant, where over $1,500 FROM 60 HENS IN TEN MONTHS has been cleared from the sale of eggs, baby chicks and fowls, raised on a city lot 40 feet square. One of the largest hatching plants in America saved over $700 this year by using our system of brooding. We sell the best brooder ever made for only $2.50.

One party hatched and raised $500 worth of poultry last year with four metal mothers, and hundreds of others are delighted with our machines and our new way of raising poultry. Our combined machine hatches and broods perfectly at the same time, with only one lamp and one-fifth the oil used in other machines. Once filling the lamp completes the hatch. It runs as steadily as a clock in any room from cellar to garret, and our Long Burning Safety Lamp runs on for weeks without attention. It is the only machine that airs the eggs in the natural way and applies the heat to the chicken like the mother hen.

MR. WALTER G. FENTON, Mt. Clemens, Mich.

Dear Sir:—Received your catalog, and thank you for same, also for the picture of the pen of Columbians, they are fine looking birds all right. I might want a cockerel next fall. If it is of any interest to you I will write a few lines about the birds which I received last winter, that is a year ago. One of the pullets laid 262 eggs in 365 days, and the other 226 in the same time. However I did not raise many chicks for the cockerel got spoiled. First he mated up all right, but then I had him long side a pen of Rhode Island Reds, and got no more fertile eggs. This season I have him in a yard where he can see no other chickens, and he is doing better. Single comb from one pullet and down between the toes from another decreased the number to a few. But there is no kick on my side, as I raised a few fine pullets, and a snow white cockerel, there is no slate in his undercolor, but a clean dark blue, which I believe will keep a whiter surface color, and still is strong enough to keep good markings. I also raised some fine stock from your cockerel and some pullets which I raised before, and if you study the cut of Rudy's Perfection Jr., White Wyandotte, you will have the shape of one of the cockerels. I expect to raise some good stuff this season, and your birds have been a great factor in building up my strain of Columbians. Wishing you much success, which you certainly deserve, I remain,

Yours truly, ARNOLD HAGENS

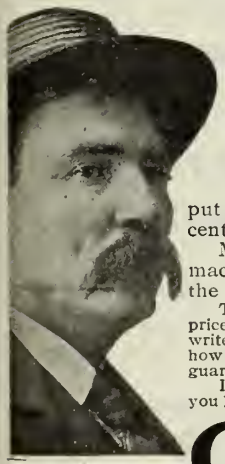
Let me send you my big book and quote you my prices for 1911



WE are now up to the time when you ought to be thinking about your new incubator and brooder. If you want to make big money out of your poultry this year, either in your city or town or country back yard, I am all ready and I'll send you my book right now and pay the postage. With it I will quote you my 1911 price, based on an output of 100,000 machines. Last year I sold 42 solid miles of incubators and brooders—75,000 machines—more machines than were sold by any five other factories in the United States combined.

The price I'll quote you for 1911, based on an output of 100,000 machines, figures a profit of less than 7 per cent on my actual net cost on every machine.

Mind you, I can make 100,000 incubators cheaper, per machine, than I can make a smaller quantity and you get the benefit, because I am satisfied with 7 per cent profit.

That means less than 70 cents profit on each machine—and the price I'll quote you will be less than $10—freight prepaid. If you'll just write me a postal card, I'll send you my big book and tell you exactly how much I'll charge you for an incubator delivered at your station—guaranteed for 10 years—sold on 30, 60 or 90 days' free trial plan.

I'll sell you your incubator at my actual factory cost and charge you less than 70 cents for my trouble in making it.

"The place where most incubators come from"

Ernest Kellerstrass Says

I Made $18,178.53 Net Profit In One Year Selling Chickens And Eggs

I took a flock of 1,638 chickens and made them net me a profit of $11.09 per bird in 12 months' time. My farm and books are open for inspection to any State Poultry Experimental Station. If your station doesn't find the above statements true, I'll donate $1,000 in cash to your institute.

My New Book Tells HOW I DID IT

In my new poultry book I tell how I made $3,600 in one season from 30 hens on a lot 24x40, by feeding the scraps from my table three times a day. I'll give you the names of those who paid me over $2,000 for the eggs alone from these fowls—you can refer to them.

I'll tell you how I make my chickens weigh 2½ pounds at 8 weeks of age.

I tell how I prepared my chickens for the show room, so that I won over 90 per cent of all the blue ribbons offered during 1907 and 1908. This has never been published before.

This book covers all branches—it tells everything necessary to success with poultry. It tells you what I have done—how I started.

I Tell You Everything That is Necessary to Success in the Poultry Business.

It also gives you my opinion and experience that I have had with advertising solicitors of poultry journals.

It also gives my opinion and experience that I have had with poultry judges in the show room, and why, in my opinion, the little fellow don't get what he thinks he ought to have in the show room. I tell it just as I have seen it and experienced it. There are several pages in this book taken from my records, and from my cash book and ledger. There are no secrets—I tell it all.

Dear Sirs:—We received the Incubator and Brooder in good shape, and to our surprise, not having any experience with incubators, the first hatch was 94%, the second was 96% and the third, 98%. We did not know anything about operating the machine, but old, experienced poultry men say that is a grand record. J. F. BELTZ, Prop. Ideal Farm.

Dear Sirs:—We are well pleased with the incubator which we bought of you. We obtained good results with it. From 455 fertile eggs we got 416 chicks. I think it was a good hatch. I do not think any incubator can beat that. The Wisconsin is O. K. JOHN DOUGLASS.

Warns you when to hot or too cold

DO not blame your incubator—ten to one it was YOUR fault you lost the hatch or it turned out poor. Be fair—wasn't some of the following reasons: FORGOT to fill the incubator lamp or trim the wick, or put water in the tank, or oil was poor (and any one of a thousand reasons.) Just supposing you had a friend who would sit by the side of your incubator for 21 long days and nights and would notify you when the temperature became TOO HOT or TOO COLD—what would you be willing to pay that friend? You can get a much safer friend from us that never sleeps, and that will ring a bell when the temperature gets TOO HOT or TOO COLD—it warns you.

One Gallon of Oil—One Filling of the Lamp—Is All You Need for a Hatch

Think of the big saving of oil that means. Think of the big saving of time and bother. Read some of the reasons and you'll also understand why the X-Ray gives so much better hatches:

Our automatic trip cuts down the flame when the egg-chamber gets too hot. All others let the excess heat escape. That's why we use only one gallon of oil to the hatch, where others use 3 to 5 gallons. We put the lamp underneath, in the center, where it belongs—not on the side. So we get absolutely even temperature throughout the egg-chamber—no cold side. The X-Ray oil tank holds 4 to 8 quarts of oil—so there's no every-day filling of the lamp—no every-day muss, smell and bother.

THE X-RAY

is the easiest in the world to ventilate and to turn the eggs in. That's because the door is at the top and all you do is to simply raise it up. There are two double-glass panels in it—so you can see the thermometer every minute without opening any door. And even the thermometer we use is different and better than any other. SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL
FOR STANDARD BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO RAISE IT

Vol. XVII CHICAGO, ILL., APRIL, 1911 No. 4

April.

One of the Best Months for Hatching and a Busy Month for Breeders. What Buyers Have a Right to Expect from Eggs They Purchase.

By Observer.

"Whanne that April with his shoures sote
The droughte of March hath perced to the rote."
—Chaucer.

"When proud-pied April, dressed in all his trim, Hath put a spirit of youth in everything."
—Shakespeare.

"Protean April mixes up his sky,
And smiles through tears and weeps when eyes are dry,
Brings out your rain-coat when the sun burns hot,
And soaks you well when it you have forgot."
—Anon.

That will do for verse. They are all as true as truth and you can take your choice. But the prose of it all is that the weather is "catchy," and showers and sunshine alternate with confusing rapdity. When you think it is going to be dry it will be wet, and when you predict rain the sun will shine. But both answer an admirable purpose; they make seeds to sprout and grass to grow, and "April showers bring May flowers."

This is the hatching month in the poultry man's calendar, though the next is "just as good."

The eggs, where the hens have been properly cared for, show a good degree of fertility.

Hens sit well, for his meanness, the louse, has not yet roused into his full summer activity.

The chickens hatched from eggs laid in April are usually vigorous and strong, because the hens have not become exhausted from long-continued laying.

Chickens hatched now will do well. Through most of the days the temperature is moderate and though the nights are still chilly, the hen or the brooder affords adequate warmth.

And in consequence of all the foregoing things, the voice of the chicken is heard in the land, not with a dolorous "peep, peep," but with a cheerful "cheep, cheep."

Though the chickens cry "cheep, cheep" from ocean to ocean, that does not mean that poultry will not be dear.

The poultryman is now a busy man. New broods are arriving, and their care demands his continuous attention. Coops are got ready, the whitewash brush is in use, everything is doing to make the young hopefuls contented and comfortable so that they may develop without let or hindrance.

Egg trade is good. The wise poultryman who planted his advertisement in February and March begins to gather in his harvest. He makes frequent trips to the express office, or the expressman calls at his office and makes the trips for him. Letters of inquiry, letters containing remittances; alas! possibly letters of complaint from those who ordered unwisely in February and March, are arriving single, in companies, regiments and battalions, and when he comes to answer all these how glad he is if he has the right kind of a circular and need only put a cross opposite the information called for.

How shall he pack the eggs sold? Well, it will not do to dogmatize on this subject. Some use boxes and they are good. Some use baskets and they are good. Some use a combination of box and basket and that is good. Some use sawdust for packing material and that is excellent; others use excelsior, oat chaff, hay dust, finely cut hay or rowen, granulated cork and other materials, and they are all good. The secret of safe shipping is to so pack the eggs that they will not receive any unnecessary jarring or jolting or become crushed. Any package and any packing material which will secure this result will answer, though there may be a choice between good things.

If you buy eggs, upon their receipt carefully unpack them, remove the wrappers, and lay the eggs in a cool place on their sides and let them rest for from twenty-four to seventy-two hours, according to the distance over which they have been transported, before they are placed under the hen or within the incubator. Whatever the reason for the advice, it is nevertheless good, for years ago a French savant made a series of experiments to test the matter, and the results fully confirmed the necessity of resting traveled eggs.

What is a good hatch? That depends. If the eggs have come this month and have been properly cared for, a hatch of fifty per cent is good. Even less, say five chickens from thirteen eggs is not so bad. One should never kick over such a hatch as that. Five thoroughbred chickens, well hatched, are worth considerable money. If two only are raised and they are good ones, the investment is not a bad one. But sometimes one will get nine, ten and even more from a sitting of thirteen eggs. That is gloriously good luck, and he should make haste to congratulate himself. The writer has sent eggs to Scotland and had them hatch fairly well; he has sent them to California and the most southern points of the United States and had them hatch nearly as well as those set at home. But he has, also, had adverse reports, poor hatches when the eggs set at home were bringing out full broods, and so he feels certain that causes other than the fertility of the eggs contribute to the size of the hatch. If the breeder has sent out fertile eggs well packed, he has done his full duty. If the buyer gets nothing but addled eggs, though the luck seems and is hard, he has no just cause for complaint. But it is the grateful practice of most breeders, and deserves the heartiest commendation, to duplicate unsuccessful sittings at half price, and not infrequently, when the facts are well known, to send an extra sitting free. It was not so nominated in the bond, but generosity is allowed to overrule justice. The buyer has no right to demand this—unless the breeder in his advertisement or circular agrees to do so—but he often is a beneficiary of the free grace of the seller. He ought to be thankful. Some are. And some take such favors as their right and do not seem to realize that any thanks are due from them. They fail to see that if the same eggs were set at home the breeder would have hatched from them chickens of much value—that he is the loser by his generosity. Why, one year I sold a man $24 worth of eggs and paid him in the fall over fifty dollars for some of the chickens he raised from them. To another customer I sold the like amount of eggs and offered him several times the sum he paid me for a part of the chickens he raised from them, but as he refused a cash offer of fifty dollars for one of these same chickens my offer was respectfully declined. But still I think it is a grateful and graceful practice to duplicate at half price sittings, when the hatches have fallen under five chickens.

The Wonderful Effects of Food.

The Truths and Theories Presented Below Are of Intense Interest to Every Earnest Fancier. Many of the Thoughts Have Never Before Been Placed Before Poultrymen.

By H. S. Babcock.

THERE is no reasonable doubt that considerable changes are wrought in the organization of living things through the nature and amount of food consumed. The relative abundance or scarcity of food certainly are potent factors in development, The great Darwin, indeed, says, "Of all the causes which induce variability, excess of food, whether or not changed in nature, is probably the most powerful." There is, however, reason for supposing that change in the nature of the food, is, also, a more or less efficient cause for those reactions which produce variability.

The most obvious effect of food is upon the size of the organization. This is evidenced by the relative sizes of the butterflies upon the islands of Java and Celebes. The original identity of these species is clear, but upon the larger and more luxuriant island the butterflies are larger than upon the other island. Other causes, it is true, may have assisted in the production of this change, but it does not seem to be a strained interpretation of the fact to attribute to food an important influence in the causing of this change.

First prize cockerel at Indiana State Fair, September, 1909, and first prize cock at Michigan State Fair, September, 1910. Bred and owned by Geo. B. Ferris, 554 North Union, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Again, Prof. Eimer, in his work, "Organic Evolution," says that he was assured by a German landowner, an extensive breeder of cattle and sheep, that "by feeding the lambs with powdered bones, he has obtained in a few years a race of sheep of much greater weight, more massive skeleton, and larger in size than the original form." And in this instance, as Nature seldom or never works from a single cause, something undoubtedly will have to be attributed to the effects of selection, yet the use of powdered bone in the food must be reckoned as the primary cause of the increase in size.

GOLDEN WYANDOTTE MALE.

One of the many grand birds of this variety bred and owned by Ira C. Keller, Prospect, Ohio.

Mr. Darwin also cites the following cases, the first from Youatt: "The improved Leicester sheep were formerly taken to Lammermuir Hills; but an intelligent sheep-master reported that 'our coarse, lean pastures were unequal to the task of supporting such heavy-bodied sheep; and they gradually dwindled away into less and less bulk; each generation was inferior to the preceding one; and when the spring was severe, seldom more than two-thirds of the lambs survived the ravages of the storms.' Mr. D. Forbes, who has had excellent opportunities of comparing the horses of Spain with those of South America, informs me that the horses of Chile, which have lived under nearly the same conditions as their progenitors in Andalusia, remain unaltered whilst the Pampas horses and the Puno ponies are considerably modified. There can be no doubt that horses become greatly reduced in size and altered in appearance by living on mountains and islands; and this apparently is due to want of nutritious or varied food." In illustration of which statement Mr. Darwin cites the small and rugged ponies on the northern islands and European mountains, those of Corsica and Sardinia, those on the islands on the coast of Virginia, and upon the Falkland Islands. And as the size has diminished in low and high altitudes and in northern and southern climates, he justly argues that the reduction in size cannot be due to the effects of climate but must be sought elsewhere, probably in the lack of proper kind and amount of food.

Every breeder of bantams knows that a too generous diet will increase the size of his pets and that he must suffer, as a penalty for his generosity, the disqualification of his birds for overweight. On the other hand the breeder of large fowls knows that he must feed liberally or his birds will never reach standard weights.

The modifications of shape through the effects of food are less obvious though by no means obscure. As Prof. Eimer truly says, and any careful observer can verify the statement, "the luxuriant shoots which spring from the stumps of trees, e. g. elms and other forest trees, which have been cut down, often bear leaves which have a quite different shape from those the tree usually bears, so that they have quite a strange appearance. This is the immediate effect of unusually increased nutrition; the same roots, which previously supplied nourishment to the whole tree, have now only to provide for a few shoots."

Nathusius, who carefully investigated the subject of swine is very positive in his statement that rich and abundant food, furnished during the period of growth, tends directly to broaden and shorten the head; and that poor and scanty food produces the reverse result.

A very interesting example of the effects of food is that relating to some salamanders which Dr. Vosseler had removed, when fully developed, from the oviduct of the mother. These he placed in an aquarium for future use, and for the space of over a year forgot all about their existence. In consequence of this the young salamanders were not properly fed upon their usual food, worms, larvae and the like, but had to pick up a precarious existence by feeding upon algae. During this period, because of this complete change in diet, they had grown from three centimeters to but five centimeters and had not undergone any metamorphosis. Although it was possible for them to quit the water, they had not done so, and as a result they had retained the long tail, large gills and other characteristics of the larvae form and had led a purely aquatic life. Had they been furnished with their appropriate food they would have developed lungs, have quitted the water, and become dwellers upon the land.

Some of the most interesting effects of food upon the living organism are those relating to color. It has been observed that the colors of butterflies are modified by the food consumed by the caterpillars. Prof. Eimer gives an account of the experiments by Koch and says: "Koch states that his attempts to influence the colors of lepidoptera by feeding caterpillars date from the year 1832, when he succeeded in producing a Chelonia Hebe either fiery or dull red on the under wings and bringing out more strongly either the black marking or the white ground alternately by feeding with different plants." The results of Koch are summarized in the words, "A change in marking is easily produced by a change in the plants fed upon." According to Darwin the color of the flowers of the hydrangea is directly influenced by alum. Canaries, fed upon a preparation of Cayenne pepper, at the time of moulting, have their color deepened almost to a claret red and the birds are advertised and sold as K. N. fed canaries. A preparation of marigold leaves is said to have a similar effect upon the plumage of these birds. Gilbert White, in his delightful "Natural History of Selborne" gives an account of a cock bullfinch which, by being fed upon hemp seed, became in time coal black, and observes, "Such influence has food on the color of animals! The pied and mottled colors of domesticated animals are supposed to be owing to high, various and unusual food." Mr. Darwin himself says that hemp seed "causes bullfinches and other birds to become black," thus corroborating and extending Gilbert White's observation. Mr. Wallace, co-discoverer with Darwin of the principle of natural selection, communicated to Mr. Darwin some facts, even more remarkable than the above. "The natives of the Amazonian region," so he said, "feed the common green parrot (Chrysotes festiva, Linn.) with the fat of large siluroid fishes, and the birds thus treated become beautifully variegated with red and yellow feathers. In the Malayan archipelago, the natives of Gilolo alter in an analogous manner the colors of another parrot, namely, Lorius garrulus, Linn., and thus produce the Lori rajah or King Lory. These parrots in the Malay Islands, when fed by the natives on natural vegetable food, such as rice and plantains, retain the proper colors. Mr. Wallace has, also, recorded a still more singular fact. The Indians (of South America) have a curious art by which they change the colors of the feathers of many birds. They pluck out those from the part they wish to paint, and inoculate the fresh wound with milky secretion of a small toad. The feathers grow of a brilliant color, and on being plucked out, it is said, grow again of the same color without any fresh operation." This might be said to be a sort of hyperdermic feeding.

Not only are size, shape and color modified through the influence of food, but other characteristics are affected and these changes become inheritable. A vast body of evidence, in support of this assertion has been collected from the vegetable kingdom; carrots, parsnips, radishes, strawberries, tulips and roses are modified in many and interesting ways by the character of the soil in which they grow, which, of course, is tantamount to saying by the nature of their food; but interesting as these details are, and as convincing as they are if we recognize the unity of all life, we turn from vegetable to animal life for instance in support of the proposition under consideration.

The domesticated ostriches produce feathers with thicker quills than the wild birds, due, probably, to the greater abundance of food in the domesticated state. In 1870 a number of pupae of Saturnia were Something About Line Breeding.

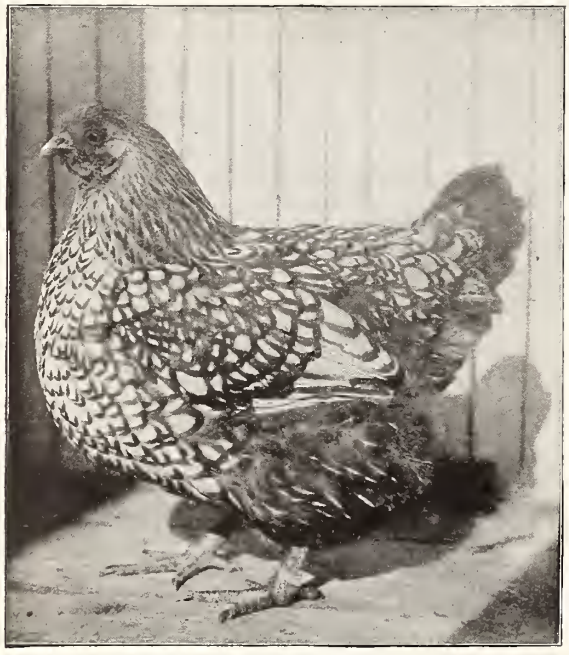
The Most Important and Perhaps the Most Neglected of all Vital Factors Which Count for Success in Breeding Fowls.

By H. L. Allen.

BREEDING in line is easily understood theoretically but not one in ten of those who understand it in theory have attempted to work it out in practice. Many of those who have explained the theory of line-breeding have set forth certain rules to be followed by the breeder, but it has been my experience that, like all other theories, the one relating to line breeding must be governed by the conditions which will confront the breeder, some of which cannot be predicted beforehand.

The theory of line breeding is to secure a proper foundation—that is a male and female embodying the breeder's ideas of perfection as nearly as may be and then after selecting two or more branches of the direct progeny to establish a similar number of lines, reunite those lines through individuals selected from two or more of the lines so established, thus breeding back in line to the original pair. This is, of course, inbreeding, but if a proper interval is allowed to elapse before attempting to reunite the blood of the different lines, with one or both of the original pair it is not inbreeding of the incestuous order.

The advantage of line breeding and indeed of inbreeding, lies chiefly in the fact that it reduces the number of different ancestors in a fowl's inheritance greatly.



SILVER WYANDOTTE PULLET.
Winner of first at Cleveland, January, 1911. Bred and owned by Ira C. Keller, Prospect, Ohio.

In the first four generations of a fowl in which inbreeding of no kind appears, there are 30 ancestors. It is obvious that among these 30 ancestors there must be a diversity of type which cannot but make the progeny of such a bird, when mated with another of similar breeding differ greatly in characteristics. Each ancestor in a fowl's ancestry exerts some influence, some, it is true, more than others, and it is not infrequent that the one exerting the most influence is one possessing certain traits or characteristics which the breeder is anxious to steer clear of.

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCK COCK.
A grand bird and a winner. He has produced many of the choicest birds that won at strong shows during the past season and now heads one of the best pens at Riverdale Farm, owned by H. W. Halbach, Box 2, Waterford, Wis.

This tendency to atavism, or jumping back, is the most annoying feature of breeding from good individuals, without regard to the traits and characteristics which its ancestors possessed. One undesirable ancestor somewhere among the fourteen ancestors making up the first three generations in a bird's pedigree has been known in infrequent cases to spoil that bird as a breeder, for in some mysterious way nature seems to have given that one bird the prepotency to enable him to impress his traits so strongly on his progeny that, while they do not show externally in certain of his descendants, they will come out through the progeny of those descendants.

It is to avoid the recurrence of undesirable traits such as accompany breeding from birds of miscellaneous lines, that thoughtful breeders have resorted to inbreeding and especially to line breeding. After two or three generations of line breeding, the breeder is perfectly familiar with the individual traits and characteristic of every individual in the ancestry of his year's crop of chicks. As I said at the beginning of this article, I have never bound myself down by any set rules but have allowed my course to be governed by the conditions confronting me. It has been my usual custom, after securing two lines from the original pair to let two generations intervene and then breed a male back to the original female or vice versa. As the lines originally established are carried on from generation to generation this breeding back to an exceptionally good individual after the lapse of two generations is frequently resorted to to help establish or strengthen certain typical characteristics.

No great prize winning family in any branch of live stock has ever been evolved without resorting to inbreeding, but the greatest success of this kind of breeding has always been secured when inbreeding was practiced in connection with line breeding. Inbreeding as practiced indiscriminately is like a two-edged sword in that it cuts both ways, the breeder having to take the chance of getting an intensification of the undesirable as well as the desirable qualities.

By practicing line breeding, however, even in its simplest form which is the separation of the blood of sire and dam for two or three generations and then reuniting the strains so established either by crossing a male and female from the two branches, or better still by mating a male or female from one of the branches back to the original of the opposite sex, the dangers attendant upon indiscriminate inbreeding are avoided and the chances of injurious atavism are reduced to the minimum.

There are those who have carried the establishment of family branches much farther than I have attempted to do, but on the moderate scale which has characterized my own inbreeding operations, I have found line breeding as I have attempted to describe here, a most satisfactory method for producing a flock of birds year after year that will adhere closely to the type desired and with four reversions to the earlier type which, even in our oldest breeds was existent not so many years ago.

If these few observations on a subject which possesses interest to all breeders, will be able to make plainer to those who may be beginners in the race for breeding honors, why line breeding in far preferable to a method which depends upon constant outcrosses and in almost as great a degree preferable to inbreeding without preservation of the individual blood lines, the writer will have accomplished the object which caused the attempt to present them in readable form.

Poultry maxims are condensed truths, convenient as reminders, but they need to be expanded for practical use.

Quality should always have the precedency of quantity. There is more profit in raising ten birds worth $100 each than raising one thousand birds worth $1 each. "Not how many, but how good" is an excellent motto for a fancier.

The best things cost effort. Precious minerals and precious stones are found after protracted effort. The gold and diamonds of the mine must be dug for persistently. Hard study strengthens the breeder's mind as hard work strengthens his muscles.

Why Chicks Die in the Shell.

Influences Which Affect Conditions With Both Hens and Incubators. With Proper Management, There Need be Little Trouble.

By L. A. Banta.

HE who can invent some powerful remedy, or devise some simple and practical method to prevent "chicks from dying in the shell" would make a fortune in a short time. Chicks die in all stages of incubation when the eggs are set under hens, as well as when set in incubators. It is not necessarily the fault of incubators any more than it is the fault of hens.

We do not hear much about chicks dying in the shells when the eggs are set under hens, for the reason the loss is small in each case, and the trouble is generally ascribed to some other reason, such as "trampled to death," "hen did not set good," "shells too soft," etc.

When the eggs are set in an incubator, they are under the care of the owner, and his disappointment is great when he sees his nice hatch that he has counted on so much, dead or only half hatched.

It may be a surprise to many to know that the temperature of "broody" hens will vary considerably. I have tested sitting hens with a nest full of eggs where the highest temperature shown was only about 101 degrees, and the hatch would be good—perhaps bad.

Most persons think that the only time chicks die in the shell is when the eggs are set in an incubator. But this is a great mistake. I believe that there are hundreds of thousands more eggs spoiled when set under hens that when set in machines. And the report of the various experiment stations will bear me out in this statement.

The manufacturers of incubators are keenly alive to this difficulty and they have spent thousands of dollars in experimenting and perfecting their machines.

I propose to treat this subject in the viewpoint of the man that is operating an incubator, but it will apply equally as well to the natural method of incubation.

To begin with, the egg is the starting point of the chick, therefore the egg must be fertilized and contain all the essential elements necessary to produce and grow the chick till hatching time.

A laying hen has stored up in her system, more or less, all the component parts that go toward making up the perfect egg.

Now, if the laying hen has had access to a variety of feeds, there is much better chance for a perfectly balanced egg.

If, for instance, a hen can only get those foods that go almost entirely to the making of fats, there is no doubt but that the egg will contain an excess of these elements. For a short time these elements that are lacking in the feed will be made up from the excess stored up for just such emergencies, but the supply will soon run short and the eggs will not be good for hatching purposes.

Such eggs are not properly proportioned and the "chicks are liable to die in the shell." If onions, spoiled food or dirty scraps are fed to laying hens, it is very easily detected in the eggs, and such are unfit to eat or hatch. Therefore we may set it down as a rule that eggs from hens that are improperly fed or that do not have access to a variety of foods, will not be rightly proportioned and will not hatch well. But at the same time it is well to remember that "nature is a wonder worker" and exceptions will occur to this rule as well as any other rule that man may make. Looking back over my 14 years of experience in hatching thousands and thousands of eggs, I am safe in saying that fully 90 per cent of chicks that have died in the shell under my observation, have died because the eggs were not proportioned rightly. I will give an instance: I was hatching eggs from a small flock of Leghorns mated to a strong vigorous male, and the eggs hatched exceedingly well. I shut them up for experiment and fed all the corn they could eat. The egg supply did not cease or slacken up for a long time, but after they had been fed this way for about 10 days the eggs did not hatch as well by 40 per cent. The "modern hen" is sort of a laying machine and we have been breeding them along this line for years. We do get great quantities of eggs as compared with years ago, but under this forced system we probably do not get as good eggs for hatching purposes.

Fewer eggs would probably mean better eggs for hatching. Just think what it means when we expect a hen to lay 200 or more eggs per year——and every one of those eggs to produce a strong vigorous chick.

There is a good reason why eggs hatch better in the spring when the hens can get to the ground and pick up all kinds of feed. It is also "nature's mating time" and eggs will hatch better then than any other time of the year. It is certainly reasonable to suppose that if 100 eggs are placed in an incubator and 70 of them hatch good, strong, vigorous chicks while the other 30 "die in the shell" that the fault lies in the eggs.

But the trouble might be partly in the eggs and partly in the incubator. The 70 eggs might be strong enough to get out of the shell even under slightly adverse conditions, while the other 30 eggs would die in the shell. If eggs hatch well under hens and do not in incubators, then look to the incubator. However, this is not always a test, as some hens in a flock may produce good eggs and others may produce eggs that do not hatch well. In setting a hen you may get all good eggs, but in setting an incubator you will have to use eggs probably from your whole flock. Test the incubator by comparing it with what all your hens may do, rather than with any particular one.

No incubator will hatch well when the temperature is constantly varying from 95 to 105 degrees. In my experience I find that more harm is done when a machine varies four or five degrees a day than if it set steady at a low heat. Cheap machines that are not well insulated will cause much trouble in this regard. Eggs should be well ventilated, but not ventilated with air that has been overheated.

If the air has not been overheated and is normal, no moisture need be supplied. A small leak in the heater or pipes, where lamp gas can get into the egg chamber will kill the chicks and is another frequent cause when the incubator is at fault.

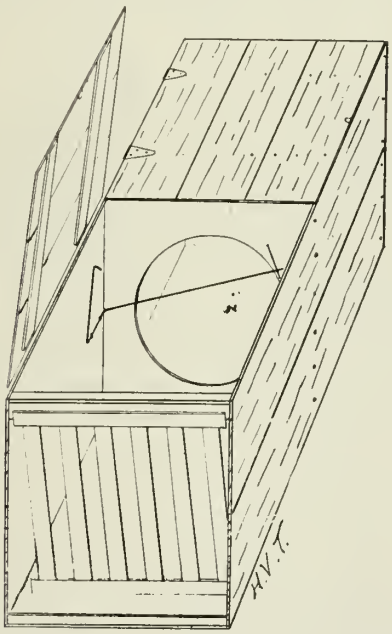
A Good Home-Made Trap Nest.

The Use of the Trap Nest is the Surest, Quickest and Most Profitable Way to Build Up a Flock or Strain of Heavy Layers.

By H. V. Tormohlen.

THE illustration shown gives a fair idea of a trap nest that anybody can make in a little while with only a hammer and a saw for tools. Of course, if you have many hens you will have to make several nests to accommodate all, and then all the other nests must be closed or torn up.

The trap nest has been quite an important factor in building up strains of heavy layers among most of the popular breeds today. The down-to-date American has insisted upon knowing just how many eggs a hen could lay in a year when the statement was made that she was a good layer. Then with definite figures and a standard to go by, made by the best layers in a large flock, he has insisted that it was possible to have a whole flock of layers as capable of turning out a great number of eggs as the few heavy layers that he started with. What the Babcock test has done for the dairyman in eliminating the non-cream producing cows from his herd, the trap nest has done for poultrydom in eliminating the non-layers from the flock of hens. Using the trap nest, the breeder, by a process of elimination and culling each year, breeds from only the best layers in his flock and has slowly increased the average egg yield per hen until it is a third more than twenty-five years ago. The small fancier and back-yard poultry raiser has taken more interest and has been more successful along this line, as he has had only a few hens and a limited space. He knew just how many hens he had and how many his neighbor had and the neighborly pride in getting more eggs per hen from his flock excited more care and interest.



Home-made Trap Nest, described by H. V. Tormohlen in accompanying article.

The trap nest is made in two compartments. The box proper is fifteen inches square by thirty-two to thirty-six inches long. The hole or opening between the compartments need not be round as pictured unless you care to make it so, but it should be just large enough for a hen from your flock to pass through easily. The larger breeds require a larger opening, of course.

A large stiff wire is bent in the shape indicated, and the part passing over the opening is made to work freely up and down under the wire guards held by small staples, the whole wire assuming a lever action.

With the trap door caught up on other arm of the lever the hen passes under it and as she starts to pass under the wire lever into the second compartment and into the nest proper her back gently presses against the wire raising it and at the same instant sliding the other end of the lever out from under the trap door. The first compartment should be made a little longer than the trap door is high to prevent the door dropping on the hen's back before she gets quite into the nest proper. The wire arm over the opening should be placed high enough so that the hen will naturally try to pass under it instead of over it. Each hen should have an aluminum or copper leg band, with a number on it, on one of her legs. Then as you release the hen you can put the egg down on your memorandum to her credit. Sometimes the hens will enter the nest for curiosity, and especially is this true when the system is first installed, but after they become used to it, they will seldom ever enter except to lay. To get the hens acquainted with the nests the doors may be propped up for several days.

The trap nest is also excellent for sitting hens—you can release the hen to get her feed and trap the door, and then after she goes back on the nest she shuts the door after her and other hens cannot enter to bother her or break the eggs. You can also easily catch the hen that is an egg eater with the trap nest, as some of the broken egg shells will tell the tale.

There is always something new in the poultry industry. If it isn't a new variety of fowls, it may be a new brood coop, or a new method of setting a hen. The light is always breaking out in some new spot.

Subscription price, 50 cents per year, except in Chicago, Canada and foreign countries, where, on account of increased postage, the price is 75 cents per year.

Advertisements not of an objectionable nature will be inserted at reasonable rates. Rate card and discounts mailed to all applicants promptly on request.

All subscriptions are immediately discontinued at the expiration of the time for which they have been paid. An X opposite this paragraph means that your subscription has expired and you will not receive the next number unless you renew promptly.

The instruction found in the columns of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is the best and most reliable that money can buy, and that the most practical and successful poultrymen of America can produce. The Journal is therefore a school for the amateur and a help to the expert, and neither can afford to be without it.

We want agents everywhere, and will pay liberally for good workers. Write us for terms.

For the year 1911, SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL guarantees an average monthly circulation of 30,000 copies.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is a monthly magazine of national circulation and advertisers secure a profitable business from all sections. Changes of ads must be received not later than the 15th of the month, and new ads the 20th, in order to insure insertion in the month following.

SUBSCRIBERS GUARANTEED AGAINST LOSS.

It is the policy of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL to accept advertisements from only thoroughly honorable poultrymen and business firms. Great care is taken in this respect. We therefore guarantee all our subscribers against loss through deliberate fraud on the part of any display advertiser in our columns. If by chance any subscriber should be swindled in this way we will make good his loss if within 30 days from the time of sending his order to the advertiser he will furnish proof that will enable us to convict the advertiser of intentional fraud, and provided the subscriber proves to us that when writing to the advertiser he stated that the ad was seen in SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL.

Many a seller of eggs for hatching gets the kicks that ought to be administered to the hen which sat on the eggs.

Every poultryman has had a unique experience. It may resemble, but it is not identical with, that of another. Tell it. If what others have learned is helpful to you, what you have learned will be helpful to others. Don't be a stagnant pool, keeping all you receive, but be a spring, giving forth the water which has come to it. Send S. P. J. an article for publication.

The Beginners' Class.

There is, in the poultry industry, always the beginner's class. Every year hundreds and thousands of persons begin to breed poultry. Some of them are young men and women and others are middle-aged and even old, but they are alike in one thing, they need elementary instruction. Hence it is both wise and necessary that there should appear from time to time in the columns of this journal articles adapted to their needs, furnishing instruction which has long been familiar to the veteran but which to them is new, useful and interesting. And it is obvious that the publication which is issued in the interests of all should contain the information which all require.

The beginner's class is one which should have special interest to the established breeder, and for two reasons; first, because the members of this class are the ones who will carry on his labors when his lifework has been done, and second, because they contribute materially to his support by the purchase of both stock and eggs. As a sentimental—in the best sense of the word—reason he should look with favor upon the beginner's class, and as a business proposition this class is both necessary and desirable. And any instruction which will increase the membership of the class or make it a permanent addition to the ranks of poultry breeders, ought to look interesting and engaging to him. There can not be too many beginners and these beginners can not be too carefully instructed in what makes for success.

In a very inportant sense, also, we are all beginners and belong to the beginner's class. We are ever learning but never arriving at the truth. Each season we begin the routine of life over again; each season we repeat the tasks of the year before. But we ought to do this with a difference. The lessons of last year have not been well learned unless they have taught us to do some things better than we ever did them before. And as members of this advanced beginner's class, to which the oldest breeders belong, we need to go over the elementary instruction again "lest we forget," and for the further reason that we may extract more meaning out of it than we derived from it when we were literal beginners. It may be set down as a demonstrated truth that advanced learning is but elementary learning studied in more and greater detail. Read a good book through and you will get its general drift; read it a second time and you will see the bearing of part upon part; read it a third time and its style may impress itself upon your mind; and as you read it again and again new beauties will flash upon your understanding. And it is just so with the elementary truths of poultry breeding, the oftener they are studied the more will their content reveal itself to our minds. And so, while we should ever advance, we shall advance the more surely if we keep elementary truths constantly before us. We are condemned—no, it is our high privilege—to be life members of the beginner's class.

But there are two ways in which we may belong to this class—as pupils and as teachers, for the teacher is as much a member of a class as the pupils whom he instructs. And as the teacher must study even more thoroughly than the pupil the subjects of instruction, so that he may not only teach the truths but give a reason why they are truths, so the veteran breeder who assumes the prerogative of teaching the beginners, should always remain a student of the subjects upon which he gives instruction. And by becoming such a teacher the veteran will come to know much of the truth, while he imparts to others what he has himself learned, and will, while rendering a service to others, be helping himself in the most effective manner. Fortunately there is no subject connected with poultry breeding which will not richly repay the efforts of reexamination; and more fortunately there are breeders who are willing to restudy an old subject with the view of aiding others and repaying the debt they owe to those who helped them in their primary days; and most fortunately it is a fact that those, who restudy the lessons designed for the beginner's class, will learn important truths which had hitherto been hidden from their view.

The Lesson of the Types.

The poultry-keeping public may be regularly divided into two great classes, respectively called fanciers and practical poultry keepers. In the extreme types of these two classes, the object of the one is the development of beauty, in form and color, irrespective sometimes of other conditions, and the object of the other is purely the making of money. But between these extreme types there is a great body of poultrymen who combine in various proportions the purposes and characteristics of the two types. Those, whose main purpose is the production of beauty and to whom the making of money is a secondary consideration, are properly classed among the fanciers, and those whose main object is to make money and the development of beauty is a subsidiary consideration, are classed as practical poultry keepers. But in some instances these purposes are so nearly balanced that the line of demarcation is extremely uncertain, and it is very difficult to assign the individuals to their proper class.

Nor are these classes absolutely fixed and permanent. Individuals are constantly going from one class to the other as their main purpose fluctuates. One who to-day may belong to the practical class, tomorrow may have become a member of the fancier class and vice versa. While no statistics are available for proof, yet there is a general belief that the tendency is stronger for the practical man to become a fancier than for the fancier to become a practical poultryman, and this belief has become crystalized in the axiom, "Once a fancier, always a fancier." General beliefs may, of course, be founded upon imperfect and incomplete observations, but in this instance the general belief seems to be based upon the nature of things. The keeping of fowls is an interesting and attractive pursuit. To become profitable, close study and observation are necessary. But such study and observation discloses that even the most utilitarian flock is not without beauty, that some individuals are more beautiful than others, and, other things being equal, the more beautiful specimens will be preferred. And thus by degrees, through the study of beauty, a love for the beautiful in fowls is developed, until in time it overtops the more utilitarian purposes, and the practical poultryman unconsciously grows into a fancier. And so it is probable that the axiom, "Once a fancier, always a fancier," is based upon and expresses in a general way, subject to a few exceptions, a profound truth, and that of the two tendencies towards change, that which is fancierwards is much the stronger.

There are a number of types in the keeping of poultry, for example, the production of eggs for the general market; the production of eggs for hatching; the production of chicks for sale immediately after hatching; the production of broilers; the production of roasters; the production of capons, the production of exhibition and breeding stock. Like the types of poultrymen, these types of poultry keeping are often combined. For example, the fancier usually combines the production of eggs for hatching and breeding and exhibition birds. And he, also, in a smaller way, may produce eggs for the general market, after the breeding season is over, and dispose of his cull chickens as broilers and some of the old fowls as roasters. The practical poultryman, on the other hand, who produces eggs for the general market, is obliged to rear a large number of chickens to renew his laying stock, except in those comparatively rare cases where he buys his pullets, and the many surplus cockerels will be marketed as broilers, and the old fowls, no longer to be kept for eggs, as roasters. The hatching and sale of day old chicks may be practiced by either class, as may the production of capons, though these two types seem rather to belong to the functions of the practical poultryman than to the fancier. There is thus seen to be an intermingling of types in the manner of keeping fowls, just as there was in the classes of those who keep them.

The fact that all these types are not rigid, but are fluctuating, shows or tends to show, that the relation between all classes is one of interdependence, of mutual helpfulness and not of implacable antagonisms. The practical poultryman needs the fancier, the fancier needs the practical poultryman, and the great poultry industry needs both. There must be standards to fix the characteristics of different breeds and varieties, if we would not have "chaos come again," there must be breeders, who will keep the breeds and varieties true to type; there must be exhibitions to encourage breeders and to stimulate the breeding of fowls to standard requirements; there must be men to produce and disseminate the best breeds and varieties; there must be those who will produce the eggs and meat demanded by the markets for the public's consumption, there must be some to produce eggs, broilers, roasters and capons for sale, and others to produce eggs for hatching, superior breeding stock and exhibition birds; in a word, there must be all types of poultrymen and all types of poultry-keeping, in order that the needs of the world may be fully met. And this is the lesson that the types would teach us that all classes are needed for the great work to be done, which if we fully learn, and act upon the knowledge acquired, will tend to bind all poultrymen together, and enable them to work without unnecessary friction for the promotion of a common object, the fullest development of the poultry industry.

Find out what your enemies dislike and then provide it for them. Vermin and disease are the enemies of the domesticated fowl, and they dislike clean quarters, fresh air, sunlight and dust. Give the hen these and she will put many of her enemies to flight.

News Notes

AN IOWA BRANCH OF THE A. P. A.

The Iowa members of the American Poultry Association have formed a temporary organization as an Iowa State Branch and will make application for a charter at the next annual meeting of the Association. The officers are as follows:

President—Ernest W. Brown, Des Moines.

First Vice-President—E. M. Reynolds, Cedar Rapids.

Board of Directors—F. H. Shellaberger, West Liberty; W. S. Russell, Ottumwa; W. C. Rauch, Lamoni; Wm. M. Marsh, Iowa Falls; J. J. Elliott, Moorhead; W. A. Lippincott, Ames.

Secretary-treasurer—A. J. Smith, Cedar Rapids.

THE ORPINGTONS.

A book on this breed has recently been published by the Reliable Poultry Journal Co., that should be in the hands of all breeders of Orpington fowls. It treats of the White, Buff and Black varieties, with a chapter on the non-standard varieties, and tells the breeder how to select and mate for best results. Care, feed and management is fully discussed. This new breed book is the most comprehensive in text and the most beautifully illustrated publication on the Orpington fowl yet printed. A special chapter on Fitting Fowls for Exhibition is included in the book. The book was edited by J. H. Drevenstedt, a breeder and judge of twenty-five years' experience and a member of the Standard Revision Committee, 1910. Illustrated by Messrs. Sewell, Schilling, Burgess and others. "The Orpington" contains 80 pages, 8½x11½, printed on first-class paper, is fully illustrated and bound in heavy paper. The price is 75 cents. Copies may be obtained by sending remittance to Successful Poultry Journal, 355 Dearborn St., Chicago.

NOMINATIONS FOR AMERICAN POULTRY ASSOCIATION OFFICES.

Election Commissioner Kimmey has sent to all members of the association a complete list of the nominees for the offices to be filled at the coming election. The nominating vote is overwhelmingly decisive but as usual only a small fraction of the membership were sufficiently interested to cast their preliminary ballot. The officers to be elected are president, first vice-president, second vice-president, secretary and three members of the executive board. The place for holding the next annual meeting was also voted upon. The vote for the second week in August was 163, or more than double the number for all other periods combined. Denver received 201 votes, Boston 188, Toledo 73, Buffalo 11 and St. Louis 11. Less than 450 ballots were cast. For president, Reese V. Hicks received 262 votes and the four next highest candidates received 107. For vice-president, L. H. Baldwin, 224 votes, and the four next highest 49. For second vice-president, L. B. Audiger, 210 votes; S. J. Hopper, 115; next three candidates, 35. S. T. Campbell for secretary received 433, with practically no competition. For executive board the highest candidates were Chas. M. Bryant, 210; T. F. McGrew, 162; H. H. Collier, 140; Geo. S. Barnes, 127. The next highest candidate received 51 votes.

A COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE EXPRESS COMPANY RATES AND ABUSES.

President Bryant of the American Poultry Association has instructed the secretary to inform the president and secretary of all branch associations that he desires a committee of five members from each branch to serve as an express committee. The president and secretary of each branch to be members of this committee, and the branch president to appoint the other three members. This committee to be known as "The Committee on Express Rates and Service."

The duties of this committee shall be to investigate the rates and abuses fairly chargeable to the express companies as carriers of poultry, eggs and baby chicks, and report with recommendations to the executive board at its next meeting.

ORPINGTONS

BUFF, BLACK AND PEARL WHITE

Buff Orpington Cockerel. Note the splendid type. Color equally good. Product of C. S. Byers, Orpington Specialist, Hazelrigg, Ind.

For the past six consecutive years I have shown and WON THE COVETED PRIZES ON ORPINGTONS AT CHICAGO During this period I won more premiums on Orpingtons at Chicago than any other THREE EXHIBITORS COMBINED.

THERE'S A REASON

I am the oldest Breeder of the three varieties of Orpingtons in the States. Twelve years of careful line breeeing and study has developed the BYERS STRAIN, which is now a combination of the best possible utility and exhibition qualities such the public demands. This achievement together with my experience as Judge of Orpingtons at the largest shows enables me to know what constitutes a good Orpington and how to produce them. Some of the gratifying evidence follows; my late customers have won with my birds—FIRST at Omaha, Atlanta, Los Angeles, Portland, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Birmingham, Seattle, Kansas City, Dallas, Allentown, Cincinnati, Springfield, Memphis, Nashville, Detroit, and a hundred smaller shows and all bred from matings not so good as I have this season from which I OFFER AND WILL DELIVER MY BEST EGGS AT $15 PER 15. Eggs from my SECOND BEST MATINGS which are equal to those producing the winners at above shows $10 per 15. Other select matings $5 per 15, $25 per 100. ALL UNFERTILE EGGS REPLACED FREE.

oped into moths so different in color and general characteristics that they were reckoned by entomologists as a distinct species from their parents. "Youatt on Sheep" has the following passage bearing upon this subject: "In all the different districts of Great Britain we find various breeds of sheep beautifully adapted to the locality which they occupy. No one knows their origin; they are indigenous to the soil, climate, pasturage, and the locality on which they graze; they seem to have been formed for it and by it." "According to Pallas," says Mr. Darwin, "and more recently according to Erman, the fat-tailed Kirghisian sheep, when bred for a few generations in Russia, degenerate, and the mass of fat dwindles away; 'the scanty and bitter herbage of the steppes seems so essential to their development.' Pallas makes an analagous statement with respect to one of the Crimean breeds." The intestines of herbivorous animals are much longer than those of the carnivorous—the greater length being required to secure a complete digestion of their less concentrated food. When a carnivorous animal becomes domesticated and accustomed to a partial or complete vegetable diet, the intestines one would naturally expect would become lengthened. This is found to be the case. The wolf and the dog are allied; the former feeds upon flesh, the latter partially upon vegetable foods. The intestines of the dog are longer than those of the wolf. The domestic cat has longer intestines than the wildcat, probably for the same reason. The tadpole, which feeds principally upon algae, has an intestine of surprising length, while the adult frog, whose food is animal substances, has a very short intestine. And Mr. Darwin says, "The nature of food supplied during many generations has apparently affected the length of the intestines; for according to Cuvier, their length to that of the body in the wild boar is as 9 to 1; in the common domestic boar as 13.5 to 1, and in the Siam breed as 16 to 1."

In domestic fowls, breeds with clean limbs, like the Games and Leghorns, often produce chickens with feathered shanks. Various theories to account for this variation have been advanced —continuous inbreeding, violent outcrossing of strains, etc.—but none seems so satisfactory and convincing as that this is caused by excess of food.

Food seems, also, to have some effect upon the reproductive capacity of the organism. Mr. Darwin says that "Many highly cultivated plants, such as pears, pineapples, bananas, sugar-cane, etc., are nearly or quite sterile," and that he is "inclined to attribute this sterility to excess of food and to other unnatural conditions." And, referring to J. Mills as his authority, he further remarks: "It is said that mares brought up on dry food in the stable, and turned out to grass, do not at first breed." Fertility in the domestic fowl, it is generally believed, is greatly reduced by over-fatness. The hens which are in this condition are apt to produce a reduced number of eggs, and eggs of a reduced fertility, so that when they are incubated, either through total sterility or weakness of the germs, they fail to hatch. But abundance of food, if of the right character, compared with the scarcity of food in the wild state, has probably contributed to increase the prolificacy of fowls. "Our domestic hens," says Prof. Eimer, "have been brought by continued high feeding to lay eggs throughout the greatest part of the year, and to receive the male throughout the whole of this time. The latter condition must tend to increase the number of eggs laid."

A striking example of the effect of food upon the living organism is furnished by the hive bee. As is well known, the inmates of the hive consist of the queen, which lays all the eggs (save in exceptional cases), the workers or imperfect females, and the drones or males. The grub, which produces the worker, if placed in an enlarged cell and fed upon a stimulating diet, the so-called royal jelly, will develop into a queen. In this instance the effect of food is so clear and convincing, so separated from all other influences, that it is impossible to make a mistake concerning its influence; the nature of the food, and that alone, determines whether the grub shall develop into a worker or a queen bee.

When one considers the varied effects of food upon the living organism, producing variability in so many and diverse directions, when he remembers that the effects are similar in the vegetable and animal kingdoms, he will see that the study of food and its effects upon the domesticated fowl is worthy of greater attention than it has so far received. As breeders we have recognized some few of these effects, as for example, upon the size and prolificacy of our fowls, but shape and color effects have as yet scarcely been studied. Here and there a reference may be found to the effects following the feeding of yellow corn to white fowls, or iron—usually in the drinking water—upon black-red fowls, but even these references lack something in the way of convincing proof. We may feel a reasonable degree of certainty that the rewards for such study will be adequate. Further observation and experiment will probably confirm the statement that no single cause is more potent in effecting changes in the living organism, whether vegetable or animal, than the food which nourishes it. And it is interesting to note that the fact which is thus proved further proves the unity of life in all organic beings, that in some mysterious way we are allied, not only to the beasts of the field and the birds of the air, but also to the stately trees which afford us a grateful shade from summer's heat, and the humblest weed that grows in the cranny of the rock. When we fully realize this fact, we can understand the feeling which prompted Wordsworth to say:

"To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears."

Oats are a good growing food, and if you wish growthy chickens try some oatmeal for them.

A fancier informs us that the following makes a good food for laying hens and growing chicks: One quart of whole oats, soaked in water twenty-four hours; one quart each of cornmeal, ground beef scraps and wheat bran; all mixed into a stiff dough.

Incubators & Brooders

MOISTURE AND VENTILATION IN INCUBATORS.

It is important that eggs placed in the incubator be incubated under conditions as nearly natural as possible. The fact that an incubator hatches a fair percentage of the chicks from the eggs placed in the machine should not be taken as evidence that the incubator is a great success and the equal of the hen. Many incubators hatch the eggs but do it in an unnatural way and the chicks are weaklings and soon fall prey to some disease and die. A fair percentage of the chicks hatched in an incubator, even if they are improperly incubated, can be raised to maturity if placed with hens, or the chicks may be hatched under a hen and raised in the crudest kind of a brooder and many of them will reach maturity. But if hatched in a poor incubator and then the attempt is made to raise them in a poor brooder the task will be difficult, if not impossible.

Keeping the lamp well filled and clean and the wick trimmed and the temperature at the proper degree will not always insure a good hatch, although strong and fertile eggs are used. The problem of getting sufficient ventilation and moisture is an important factor and one that must be worked out entirely by the operator. Evaporation goes on more rapidly in thin shelled eggs than in thick ones. The atmosphere absorbs more moisture in the summer than in the early spring, and thus a machine that hatches well in the spring without being supplied with moisture will require some if operated in the late spring and summer. The machine that is ventilated with a sufficient amount of pure air will dry off the eggs much faster than the machine that is not ventilated so well. But neither machine will hatch properly without the right amount of ventilation and moisture. Possibly more machines make poor hatches for want of moisture than because of an over abundance of it.

If an egg, containing a live chick, be opened on the eighteenth day of incubation, the chick will be found to be full sized, but the yolk of the egg will be lying loosely, encircled by a netting of blood vessels. During the last twelve hours before the chick breaks the shell the yolk passes bodily into the chick. It is the chick's principal nourishment for the first two or three days of its life and is gradually absorbed. This is the reason chicks just hatched do not need food during the first forty-eight hours. In fact, food is not good for them during this time. When the eggs in the incubator are dried out too much during incubation, the yolk gives up a certain amount of moisture, with the result that it becomes waxy and cannot be readily assimilated by the chick which consequently dies in a few days. The non-absorption of the yolk makes the chick appear even larger than it should and this fact deceives many into thinking that the little fellows are so nice and large and therefore healthy. Whenever the temperature of the incubator is permitted to rise above 103 Fahrenheit several degrees and remain any length of time or until the eggs are warmed through to that temperature, causing rapid evaporation, the same conditions arise as when there is an insufficient amount of moisture during the whole hatch.

With the evaporation of the egg through the pores in the shell the air cell in the large end of the egg becomes larger. The air cell in the egg may be easily seen by placing the egg at the end of a paper tube and looking through it at a strong light. An egg set under a hen under natural conditions contains the approximate amount of air space during the different periods of the hatch indicated by the dark portion of the diagram. By testing several eggs an average can be taken and by consulting the diagram shown on this page, it can be determined whether the eggs have a proper amount of moisture or not. The air cell will seldom extend directly across the egg, but generally in a diagonal line. The egg should be turned over and over while being tested, to determine the full size of the air chamber.

Late hatches require moisture from the first day the eggs are in the incubator. There are several ways of applying moisture in the egg chamber. A flat pan, covering almost the entire floor under the egg tray, filled with sand and kept moist is a very satisfactory way. Two or three bricks which have been soaked in water will answer very well, or a damp cloth may be placed over the eggs. Warm water should always be used and the sand and bricks warmed before being placed in the machine. Otherwise the temperature will fall rapidly and remain low until the brick or sand has had time to warm. If the sand tray is used it may remain in the egg chamber during the whole hatch and warm water poured over whenever the sand dries. A hundred-egg machine will require several quarts of water during the progress of the hatch, and especially in dry weather and during the summer. The writer is waiting to see the machine that will hatch as strong and liveable chicks without moisture as the old hen which steals her nest out upon the ground in the grass or fence corner—all or many claims to the contrary. H. V. Tormohlen.

For healthy ducklings, healthy, well matured stock, and the absence of forcing foods are necessary.

In hatching ducklings these precautions should be used; keep eggs in a cool place; run the incubator at 102 degrees for the first week and then at 103 degrees; don't turn or cool during first three days; from fourth to seventh day turn the eggs twice a day and allow no cooling except that incident to the turning; from seventh to twenty-fifth day cool the eggs before turning, at first ten minutes, gradually increasing the time; on the twenty-fifth day close the machine until the hatch is finished; use more moisture than with the eggs of hens. This is the practice of a successful and large breeder of market ducks.

DRESSING AND COOKING POULTRY.

I read with interest the article on Dressing Poultry, by Mrs. Greggs, in the Journal for March, and would like to give my way of dressing and preparing a fowl for the table. After pulling or rubbing the feathers off, take a dish towel and rub the fowl dry and then singe it by holding it over a gas or blue flame stove, as newspaper makes a smudge and blackens the carcass, which is unnecessary. If you haven't a gas or blue flame stove, take a few drops of wood alcohol and put in a pan, light and singe in that way. Then put the fowl in a pan, cover with water, take a good handful of cooking soda, which rub all over the skin, and then take a vegetable brush and scrub well. Then rinse it thoroughly and the result will be as clean a chicken as the one washed in soap, and with much less trouble. In roasting a chicken I always use a double roaster, and never stick a fork into it to turn it, but take by the legs and turn it over often. In that way it retains the juice and is not so dry. When done, I lift it on the platter by the legs and behold a roast fit for a king!

To fry chicken, I cut it up (usually using two) and take the livers, gizzards, necks and backs and stew them to make a soup, and then roll the legs, wings and breasts in flour and put in a buttered pan, cover tight and fry in the oven, instead of on the top of the stove. When brown on one side turn, and when done it is brown all over; well done to the bone. After frying chicken in the oven you will never do it any other way. The pieces boiled can be used in various ways: picked off the bone, a salad made of it, or a gravy made and turned over it and served with waffles in southern style your family will vote for chicken and waffles every time. In this way you can make two chickens do for two meals, even with a large family.

To make a good meal from the remnants of a roast chicken or turkey, take the carcass and boil until all the meat comes off the bones easily, then add the left over gravy and dressing, the liquid the bones were cooked in, the pieces of chicken and toast dry bread, cut in squares, and serve. In this way you have a meal from your left-over roast chicken. Surely we poultry people should live well when we have all the eggs and chickens we can use.

I love roast goose, but oh you Orpington, roasted, fried or boiled! I have eaten all kinds of chicken (my husband is a minister and we ought to know from experience) and the Orpington beats them all for its juicy meat, and tender breast.

Mrs. Daniel Onstott.
Lebanon, Kans.

A WOMAN'S WAY WITH INCUBATOR CHICKS.

Chicks hatched from eggs that are from strong, healthy stock that have been properly cared for, are much easier raised. Another important item in rearing them is to hatch them properly, and that means in an even temperature, neither too low nor too high, though the eggs will stand several degrees variation either way and then hatch well, but when the machine varies too much the chicks are harder to raise.

After the chicks are hatched and are dry and spry they are ready for the brooder, which should be previously heated to about 98 degrees under the hover and 90 to 95 in the exercising department. Alternate heating and chilling, or either by itself will cause various troubles in rearing the chicks. I prefer to move the chicks to the brooder in the afternoon, and it is best for them to be at least 24 hours old before taking them from the incubator. When put in the brooder they should be given water in a fountain so they cannot get wet. A saucer of fine grit and charcoal to pick at should also be placed before them, as this helps to digest their first meal, which should be given when they are about 36 hours old. Their first feed should consist of hard boiled eggs, mashed fine. Corn bread crumbs is also a good feed. Give them just what they will clean up quickly. Scatter cracked grain in fine litter or chaff for them to scratch for as soon as they are strong enough, which will not be long. The more they are made to work for their feed the stronger and healthier they will be. I feed them on corn bread and boiled eggs until they are about a week old, feeding several times a day just what they will eat up quickly.

Success in raising chicks comes from keeping them comfortable; neither too hot nor too cold. I prefer a brooder house heated by coal or oil stoves and I use fireless hovers for them to roost under, as in this way they have plenty of room to exercise, and the room can be kept warm so that there is no danger of the chicks getting chilled while eating and exercising.

The secret of success with chicks is to keep them warm, give them plenty of room to exercise in and feed plenty of the right kind of feed in the right way, which is an easy matter if one will use common sense in this the same as other things. If one wishes to raise only a few chicks they can use a small house, 3x6 ft., 2 ft. high in rear and 3 ft. in front. Use a coal oil heater to heat it in the day time and have the fireless hover for use at night. Never put more than 50 chicks in one hover, though 100 can run together in the day time, if they are kept warm enough so they won't pile up on top of each other.

HOW ONE MAN BUILT UP HIS POULTRY BUSINESS.

At this season of the year there are many people, especially in the cities, who, having saved up a little capital, are seriously considering the matter of giving up their salaried positions and investing their time and money in the poultry business. It is to these persons that this article is especially written. The purpose of this article is to offer some timely suggestions to such persons, hoping thereby to help them in getting properly started.

We will give facts as gathered during two years' experience in establishing a practical poultry farm, operating therewith a retail milk business and doing general farming and trucking some. Our farm of forty-seven acres is located in the suburbs of a small city of some 3,000 inhabitants. It was our purpose to make our farm "pay its way" from the beginning, and get the poultry department on a paying basis with small capital as soon as possible. To do this, we invested about $200 in the dairy, using the profits from it, which were realized from the beginning, to help equip the poultry department. We preferred this to borrowing money and spending more time in putting the poultry farm on a paying basis.

When we moved onto this farm we had nothing in the line of poultry or poultry supplies except one 240-egg size incubator. We purchased another larger incubator and six brooder hovers, making our own colony brooders from good boxes and scrap lumber which we found about the farm. We purchased several hundred eggs from a reliable breeder of our acquaintance and succeeded in getting about 375 pullets into winter quarters the first season. We built many 4x8 colony brooder houses and the breeding house for these pullets the first year. The following spring we purchased cock birds from other breeders and mated to our best pullets. We also purchased two more large incubators, built one brooder house 12x30 ft. and more colony brooders. By spending about $15 the second year for advertising in the classified columns of the leading poultry journals, we were able to sell quite a nice lot of baby chick and eggs for incubating, besides selling quite a number of our best cockerels at fancy prices. The second winter found us with about 575 hens and pullets in winter quarters, having sold off a lot of the yearling breeders and also sold about 2,500 baby chicks in the spring. We doubtless would have had many more pullets to go into the laying houses that fall had we not sold off our baby chicks so closely. We also did some custom hatching the second year, and could have done quite a good deal more had we had the incubator space to rent.

After we had gotten the poultry plant pretty well established, and with prospects good as to its future, we sold the dairy at the end of the second year at a nice profit over what it had cost. With the proceeds of this sale we put in a modern water-works system for our residence and the farm also. This, we find, lightens the work for the wife as well as for the poultry keeper, and helps solve the vexing problem of the hired help.

In addition to buying the poultry equipment mentioned above, we found that there were many other things needed on a well-equipped, modern poultry plant; feed mill, bone grinder, corn sheller, pump and pump-jack, shafting, belting and the gasoline engine to pull this machinery; also some farm machinery, for it must be remembered that we did considerable truck farming and general farming, raising quite a good bit of the feed both for the cattle and poultry.

As stated above, the hired help was our one vexing problem; life on such an intensive farm is far too interesting for the average man who works for wages, even if he be allowed to make his own price for his services.

In conclusion, let me suggest if you are seriously considering the matter of engaging in poultry farming, that you be sure of your location. If you have been accustomed to living in the city for years, and are not too well acquainted with farm life, don't get too far away from the city, for you will soon get lonesome, discouraged and discontented with real rural life. Locate on or near the city limits, in easy reach of the churches, schools, theaters, grocery store, feed store, express wagons, coal delivery, etc., etc., and the change from city to country life, while great in its effect, will not be such an extreme as to discourage and dishearten you in the beginning.

Fairfield, Ill. J. H. Robey.

A FEW GENERAL HINTS FOR BEGINNERS.

When in the course of human events it becomes apparent to you that life without chickens is unbearable, get chickens (but be careful whose you get).

Much has been written about the poultry business from all points of view, and I shall not go beyond a little advice to the would-be poultry man.

After making your selection of the breed you most admire, take a little time to figure out just how much time and money you have to put into poultry.

If your resources are limited, and you cannot afford a large outlay, go to one of the breeders of your chosen variety for eggs.

It is always economy to buy eggs from his very best matings, as in this way you secure for a very moderate expenditure the results of his years of experience as a breeder and have at once a flock of high class birds.

If you are successful in raising the young you will have, probably, a surplus of cockerels, which, after you have selected the one you intend to keep, should sell for several times the original cost of the eggs and feed.

After placing your order for eggs, make preparations to take care of them upon arrival.

Have your broody hens ready. If you have none, buy as many as needed a few days before the eggs arrive. Prepare your nests in a quiet place, well protected from rats, dogs, etc. Put in four or five common eggs, dust your hens well with the lice powder as per instructions usually found on the box, and let them sit until your good eggs come.

Now you are ready for business. Your hens have settled down and are accustomed to their nests and not likely to walk off and leave them.

Take your lice powder and eggs, give the hens another light dusting, remove the old eggs and place the new ones in the nests. Place feed (dry grain and grit) and water within reach, and leave them to their task. This should be done at night.

Dust your hens again about the tenth and eighteenth days and you may be sure the youngsters will start life with one handicap eliminated.

It is well to dust again when the chicks are four or five days old.

Don't worry the hens at hatching time by looking for chicks nor by handling them.

After the chicks are out remove the shells and allow the chicks to remain under the hens until thirty-six hours old before feeding.

The first feed, and, in fact, the only one until they are four weeks old, should be one of the prepared dry grain chick feeds sold by all dealers in supplies.

Supply them with fine grit, charcoal and fresh water several times daily. Feed often and only a little at a time.

If the weather is good remove to a coop, previously prepared outdoors, and so arranged that the chicks can run in and out onto short grass. If you have no grass, give them lettuce, onion tops, etc.

Keep the hen confined until the chicks are ten days old.

Keep the coop clean and move it every other day.

Do not have your brood coops close together, as the hens will kill chicks from the other flocks should they stray in.

If you cannot give the chicks a run where they can get bugs, worms, etc., supply them with some form of animal food, such as good beef scrap, from the first.

After the hens have abandoned their flocks, arrange dry shelter for them until old enough to roost.

If an old building is to be used for roosting quarters, clean it thoroughly and spray walls, floors and roosts with some good liquid lice paint or a mixture of kerosene oil and Zenoleum or similar preparation in the proportions of two to one.

Feed well, especially of wheat and oats, with very little cracked corn, until matured.

This ends your first season's work unless you intend to exhibit, which you should do.

You will doubtless be able to sell a couple of cockerels for enough to purchase a good cock bird.

Buy the best one you can afford and mate him to your best pullets the next spring, reserving your best cockerel for the second year's breeding.

The second year mate the cockerel from the original eggs with pullets from the cock birds purchased. Mate the cock if you care to continue his blood in your yards with his own best daughters, and a cockerel from him to the hens hatched from the original eggs.

This gives you three yards, from which you should produce a lot of good birds. By careful selection and study, and by keeping a record of all matings, you can in a few years build up a strain equal to any.

It may seem that I am going too far along in advising on ma[illegible]or two years ahead of the hatching of the first eggs. If you want to succeed in the poultry business, or any other, you must have your plans laid a long time ahead and know just what you intend to do, and do it when the time comes.

It is good to have two yards to each pen of fowls, so that green stuff may be growing in one while the hens occupy the other. This saves the trouble of spading the yards to keep the ground fresh and of cutting green food for the poultry.

One difficulty in many scientific bulletins upon compounding rations is the use of scientific terms, simple enough probably to the writer because of his familiarity with the terms, but Greek to the average breeder. To make them available for practical use it is necessary for the breeder to study them and so familiarize himself with the terms used. This difficulty might have been avoided by using language understandable by the common people. Still, we repeat, it will pay the breeder to devote sufficient study to the subject to understand the terms employed. A ration scientifically compounded is one adapted to do the work required to be done, and, by a proper choice of foodstuffs, to do the work in the most economical manner. On the principle that "A penny saved is two earned," even small savings are worth looking after, and may mean all the difference between profit and loss. Good things are still good, even if they do cost some study to obtain them.

A FEW FACTS ABOUT GUINEAS.

Interest in the neglected Guinea fowl seems to be awakening.

Guinea fowls, as a substitute for the slowly disappearing game bird, are a good proposition.

The Guinea fowl is naturally monogamous, but when circumstances seem to require it, the male will take two or three wives.

If one wishes to hatch the eggs under hens, remove a portion of the eggs from the Guinea fowl's nest, but not all, lest she desert her nest, and set those removed under light weight hens. In twenty-six days the keets, as the chicks are called, will appear.

The Guinea fowl is the feathered watch dog, and will raise an alarm upon the appearance of undesirable visitors, like hawks and other maranders, upon hearing which the owner is expected to do the rest.

WHAT IT MEANS TO MAKE A SUPERIOR BROODER.

Practical poultry keepers, those who make money in the business, know that "any old brooder" will not do for the purpose of raising chicks which they have gone to the expense and trouble of hatching. Anybody can hatch chicks with a good incubator and fertile eggs, but it takes greater care and attention to raise the chicks after they are hatched; and, above all, it calls for a well constructed, properly heated and ventilated brooder.

Readers may get a first class idea of brooder construction by examining the above illustration of the Essex Model C Colony Brooder. When we say that there are actually five thicknesses of material in the roof of the hover compartment, it will appeal to everyone that this is a brooder on which labor and material have not been spared. Everything that could add to the value of a brooder has been included, regardless of cost.

The illustration shows the brooder being put together. (These brooders are shipped knocked down flat so as to save freight. They are easily put together, as the illustration shows). The numbers on the brooder are explained under the illustration, and are sufficient to indicate its superior construction. The heater parts, lamps, etc., which go with it, are not shown in the picture.

It may seem a simple matter to make a brooder, but when we consider that the walls of the hover compartment in this brooder are double (five thicknesses over the hover department); that the window to the exercising compartment is placed within two frames for ventilation and cleaning-out purposes; that in fact every comfort of the chicks, and every requirement for their health, has been considered, it will appeal to the reader that there indeed is considerable expense in the making of a good brooder, aside from the fact that in this one there is nearly double the material generally used, because it has so many thicknesses to protect it in winter. An outside brooder for use in all weathers must be scientifically designed, and thoroughly well built.

If you are interested in seeing illustrations of this brooder all set up, ready for operation, also of its heating apparatus, or of the other styles of brooder made by the same firm (five sizes and styles to choose from), all you need do is to address a postal card, asking for a free catalogue to Robert Essex Incubator Co., 29 Henry Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

(2) Insulating Felt between double board walls. (This felt is also placed between the double wooden roofs, and between the wood and steel roofs, making five thicknesses of wood, insulating felt and steel over the hover compartment.) (3) Main Wooden Roof. (4) Supplementary Wooden Roof over hover compartment. (5) Double Walls to hover compartment. (6) Extra Window at End of Brooder. (7) Double Door and Wire-Protected Window. J. A. Franklin, Logansport, Ind., exhibited some of the Black Orpingtons at the Logansport show this season and won first on cock, first on cockerel, second and third on pullets and second on pen. Mr. Franklin has a fine flock of Black Orpingtons and is selling stock and eggs at reasonable prices.

We want to call the attention of our readers to the ad of Mrs. Albert Ray, R. F. D., Delavan, Kan. She breeds S. C. White Leghorns that are clear white, extra fine in head points and are hardy, healthy heavy laying birds. She also breeds for exhibition excellence and received scores on her stock recently by a well known western judge who found a great many birds scoring from 95 to 96¼. She is selling eggs and stock at very reasonable prices.

We published last month a cut of White Wyandottes illustrating some of the excellent birds bred by Mrs. Ed. Hissong, Winfield, Ia., but through a mistake of the printer the birds were designated as Sweets' Hill Poultry Yards, E. B. Sweet, Prop., R. D. No. 1, East Holden, Maine, has several fine breeding pens consisting of Barred Rocks, exhibition and utility, all of which are bred to lay. Mr. Sweet's foundation stock of Barred Rocks came direct from A. C. Hawkins, from whom he has repeatedly gotten new stock and many of his breeding pens this season are headed by exhibition males from his best yards. He also breeds Imp. Pekin Ducks. His foundation stock came direct from James Rankin, the pioneer duck raiser of America, and is unsurpassed. His stock in both varieties has won for him in strongest competition. Those who wish eggs from these varieties should surely correspond with him. His ad appears on another page.

W. C. Pifer, Keyser, W. Va., is anxious to build up a trade with S. P. J. Readers and with this end in view he is offering stock and eggs at prices far below their real value. He breeds Rose Comb Brown Leghorns exclusively and the birds in his best pens score from 93 to 95 points. His price for eggs from these birds is only $2.50 per 15. The birds in his second pens are almost as good and his price on eggs from these is only $1.50 per 15.

RED FEATHER FARM WINNINGS.

The winnings of Red Feather Farm, Tiverton, Four Corners, R. I., at the "Big Three," Providence, New York and Boston, were probably the most remarkable of any of the big eastern breeders. They made nine entries at each show, viz: two cocks, two hens, two cockerels, two pullets and pen. Their winning were as follows: At Providence, R. I., eight regular prizes on nine entries, including first cock (color special), second cock, second and third hen, first cockerel and championship for best R. I. Red male in the show. First and second pullet and second pen, also several gold specials, the $25 cash special offered for best exhibit of R. I. Reds, also two silver cups, one offered by the Rhode Island Red Club of America and the other the State Branch cup for the best exhibit of R. I. Reds, both combs competing. At New York in the strongest entry of high class Reds ever shown, where several first and second prize winners of last year were not even placed, in fact in a competition of prize winners, they won six regular prizes on nine entries, including first cock (color special), second cockerel, etc. At Boston in the largest show ever held in the east, and in competition with the foremost exhibitors, won eight regular prizes on nine entries, including second cock, first cockerel (color special), first hen and first pen, etc. This pen attracted wide attention and was constantly surrounded by an admiring group of "Red men," and was generally acknowledged to be the classiest pen that has been shown in years. All the foregoing prize winners, with two exceptions, as well as practically all their winners in 1909 and 1910 are included in their breeding pens this season, as well as dozens of rich, red females in addition to the winning birds and they make the unqualified statement that their pens contain more winners and high class birds than any other breeder of Reds in this country can show, while their prices as stated in their free mating list, are very moderate, quality considered. Send for free mating list, addressing F. W. C. Almy, Prop., Box 55, Tiverton, Four Corners, R. I.

ZENOLEUM USED AT CURTISS POULTRY FARM.

This wonderful poultry producing farm, one of the largest institutions of its kind in the country, which has been made world-famous by the Farm Journal of Philadelphia, and Michael K. Boyer in his Curtiss Poultry Book, has for several years used Zenoleum Disinfectant throughout its tremendous establishment and in its incubators. Mr. Curtiss says this of Zenoleum: "In regard to your Zenoleum Products, will say in addition to what we wrote you two years ago, that we have continued the use of Zenoleum in every incubator that we set since we first began the use of your disinfectant and find that it has been all that we expected and more. We would not think of setting an incubator in this plant without first using Zenoleum." Free circulars and an interesting booklet will be sent to all who ask for them. Address Zenner Disinfectant Co., 203 LaFayette Ave., Detroit, Mich.

THE SHOEMAKER POULTRY BOOK.

The Shoemaker Farm offers probably the largest variety of thoroughbred fowls in America and because of its splendid reputation of so many years standing there are hundreds of poultry raisers who would not be content with a pair of birds or a setting of eggs that did not come from this farm.

Visitors to Freeport, Illinois, should not miss visiting the Shoemaker Poultry Farm. And for those who do not have this opportunity a book is issued showing in colors the birds in all the glory of full plumage. The nominal charge of 15 cents is made for this book—but as it is full of valuable poultry advice and information it is surely worth several dollars to any one who has even a few scrub chickens. HOUDANS AND ORPINGTONS OF QUALITY.

Every reader of S. P. J. who is in any way interested in these breeds should surely write to Dr. G. W. Taylor, Box S, Orleans, Ind., for a copy of his catalogue and book on Houdans. It is profusely illustrated with handsome cuts of Houdans and Orpingtons and contains special articles on the origin, mating and general methods of the successful breeding of Houdans. Dr. Taylor is an acknowledged leader and he raises thousands of birds each season. He has a grand lot of stock for sale at all times and at present he can supply all of his customers with eggs that will produce winners.

A GREAT CONVENIENCE FOR INCUBATOR USERS.

An electrical contrivance known as an Incubator Alarm has been put on the market by the Harris Electric Incubator Alarm Mfg. Co., whose address is Dept. 29, 403 McArthur Bldg., Winnipeg, Can. It sells for $2 and can be easily affixed to any machine. The object of it is to enable the operator to spend as little time as possible in watching the temperature of the incubator and keeping it running evenly at the proper degree of heat. The Alarm is so arranged that an electric bell rings whenever the temperature gets too high or too low and this saves much time, inconvenience and annoyance in having to make frequent examinations of the machine. The ad of the company appears elswhere in this number of S. P. J. Circulars may be obtained free by writing to the above address.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO RED BREEDERS

In his ad on back cover page, Edwin R. Cornish, 115 West Huron St., Ann Arbor, Mich., announces that he will close out all of his best birds, both Rose and Single Comb. This is an excellent opportunity to get some extra quality stock at prices below the real value. Mr. Cornish has one of the very best flocks in America and can furnish birds that will win at the largest shows next season. He has several pens of prize winners and other choice breeding birds mated for the egg trade and can fill orders promptly.

story. Ten years ago he was a poultry raiser. Today he makes and sells thousands of machines in every state in the union. After several years' experimenting he made a few machines for his own use and when some of his friends heard of the results which he had obtained, he was asked to make more machines after the same model to satisfy their demand. He immediately began experimenting along the lines based on his own poultry experience and met with success. Each year his business prospered because his machines were more than making good good in the hands of their owners. A postal address to Mr. Collier, Wisconsin Incubator Co., Box 000, Racine, Wis., will receive his personal attention and will bring you his handsome catalogue and full particulars by return mail.

HAVE YOU WRITTEN HIM?

The man Wickstrum, at Lincoln, Nebraska, is doing some big things for the poultry industry. Evidently he has caught the right spirit. He maintains that big as the poultry business is today, it is to be bigger tomorrow. He believes that it is a good enough business to go into in earnest and make a real business. Naturally he is enthusiastic over his famous Queen Incubator and the work it is doing. And his enthusiasm has spread far and wide. The Queen is making good. So great a number poultry raisers are making money out of it that he is perfectly safe in making the liberal terms he continues to offer. A "Queen to you on the make good plan" is his watchword. Poultrymen should know the details of the liberal offers he is making. If you have not written him do so now. It is a good time to get some of the Wickstrum spirit for this year's business. You will find his Queen Poultry Guide and catalogue interesting reading, and he will be glad to write you of his doings and send you the book free. Address P. M. Wickstrum, Box 109, Lincoln, Neb.

REDUCING ROOF COSTS.

The roofing problem has always been a vexatious one for the farmer. On barns and sheds he needed a light weight roofing which he could lay himself without having to pay for skilled labor from town. Ready roofings which were manufactured for this purpose required painting regularly or they could not be made to last. Painting the roofs every year or two was a nuisance. The average farmer was pretty sure to neglect it, while if he attended to it regularly the expense of the paint in the end amounted to more than the roof itself. When a farmer bought one of these painted roofings he would figure, say $20.00, for the roofing, and $4.00 every two years for paint. If he figured on a ten-year basis, his roof looked pretty expensive.

All this has been changed in recent years by the appearance in the market of Amatite Roofing. Amatite is laid and handled like any other roofing, except that it never needs to be painted. It has a surface of mineral matter firmly cemented on so that rain never can wash it off. This mineral surface is weather-proof and furnishes a fine durable wearing surface. The farmer who buys Amatite figures $20.00 for his roof and nothing for paint.

Our readers can obtain a sample of Amatite without charge by addressing the nearest office of the Barrett Manufacturing Company, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Minneapolis, Kansas City, New Orleans, Seattle, London, Eng.

Amatite ROOFING

Saskatoon Fair Buildings, covered with Amatite Roofing, Saskatchewan, Can.

60,000 Feet of Amatite Roofing

The accompanying view shows a series of buildings at the Saskatoon Exposition, all of them covered with Amatite Roofing.

Amatite was selected because it was inexpensive, easy to put on, required no care or attention or expense afterwards, and would give excellent durability.

If ordinary smooth roofing had been used, these roofs would require painting every year or two at considerable expense and trouble. Amatite, however, has a mineral surface which requires no painting.

Use Amatite for every roof where you want to save expense. It is the most economical solution of the whole roofing problem.

Amatite Roofing requires no skilled labor to apply; it costs no more, (in fact much less) than other roofings; and the fact that it requires no painting makes the total expense far below that of any other type of roof covering.

You can use Amatite for every kind of steep roofed building. We supply galvanized nails and liquid cement for the laps free of charge.

Send for free sample and booklet. Address our nearest office.

SILVER WYANDOTTE PULLETT.

A 94-point Silver Laced Wyandotte pullet scored by Shaner. Winner of first at Galesburg and Monmouth, Ill. shows. Bred and owned by Jas. Roberts, New Windsor, Ill.

The club desires to have as its members every breeder of White Orpington fowls, and it is to their advantage to belong to the club. Over 600 members now are enrolled and new ones are added daily. Such a rapid growth of the club is remarkable. It is officered by the leading breeders of White Orpingtons, such as Ernest Kellerstrass, president; Louis L. Haggin, vice president; F. S. Bullington, secretary-treasurer; and executive committee of J. W. Jones, J. L. McDavid, Wm. Barry Owen, Percy Cook, Dr. L. Jackson, Ernest Kellerstrass and F. S. Bullington.

The initiation fee to the club is $1, which pays for the first year's dues, and the yearly dues thereafter are $1. Life membership $10. Send 10 cents for a copy of the club book to the secretary, F. S. Bullington, Box 328, Richmond, Va.

Questions Answered

In this department each month questions will be answered that are asked by readers. When writing for information please give all details in full or an an intelligent answer cannot always be given. No portion of your letter will be published if the mere statement of the question will answer the purpose. As there are oftentimes good reasons why inquirers do not wish their identity known, we will not publish names, initials or location. Questions are answered by experts in the various branches of poultry raising. Adress all inquiries to Successful Poultry Journal, 355 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Question.—Kindly give me some information in regard to my fowls losing the feathers from the back of their necks and under their throats. They have a good appetie and seem perfectly healthy in every way. I read something in S. P. J. some time ago about the depluming mite causing this trouble and that the remedy was to apply insect powder and carbolated vaseline, but I have used both and the feathers continue to drop out.

Answer.—If the trouble will not yield to the remedies you have applied there must be some other reason for the loss of the feathers. The fact that the feathers are missing from the throat of the fowls is almost sure evidence that your birds are picking feathers from each other. The only way to remedy this is to find out which birds are addicted to the habit and to remove them from the pen. The habit of feather eating is an exceedingly hard one to break up.

Question.—I want to mate a male bird to hens but he is a brother of them and I would like to know whether the eggs will hatch and if so, would the chicks be good layers when matured?

Answer.—The eggs will hatch just as well as under any other conditions. The young birds will develop into just as good layers, provided, however, that the parent stock has not previously been inbred, by which we mean that the breeding birds themselves must not have been produced by the mating of brothers and sisters.

One mating of this kind will not be injurious and it is hardly possible that your male bird is a full brother to all the females mated to him. In order for this condition to exist the entire flock would have to be produced from eggs laid by one female and sired by the same male bird. Read the article on line breeding, by Mr Allen, in this number of S. P. J.

Question.—Can just as good results be got from a mating of a cock and pullets as from a cockerel and hens? Is it better to breed from all old stock, a cock and hens? Please tell me briefly what is line breeding.

Answer.—It might be said that a mating of male and females a full year old would be the ideal mating, but in many instances a two year old male is better. There should not be the slightest hesitancy in mating cockerels or pullets that are fully matured, which means from ten to twelve months of age. A well matured cockerel mated to hens or a cock bird mated to well matured pullets are both excellent mating. There is so little difference in any of the above matings that it is hardly worth considering. The points to be considered in selecting birds for the breeding pen are full maturity, health, vigor, activity and good size. By line breeding is meant the system of producing fowls through the mating of birds related to each other and descended from common ancestors, confining breeding operations to the members of one family, but avoiding injurious inbreeding. To practice line breeding profitably and without dire results requires skill and a somewhat thorough knowledge of the laws of mating.

Question.—I have a lot of chicks which developed leg weakness when about a week old. I have lost 40 out of a flock of 133. Will you please tell me what the trouble is?

Answer.—It is hardly possible for us to tell you just what the trouble is with your chicks and what to do for them. It would be necessary for us to see just how you had handled and cared for them. Leg weakness may be the result of several things. Board floors will cause it by creating a stiffness in the legs and feet. Exposure to cold and wet will cause it by bringing on an attack of rheumatism. Overfeeding induces it by adding weight to the body before the legs can gain equal strength, and by causing liver disease, some forms of which show these symptoms. The ravages of lice will also weaken and kill chicks and when badly affected they stagger with leg weakness.

Question.—Is there any chance to get high scoring birds from a flock that scores around 92½? How long can eggs be kept for hatching?

Answer.—You can get a few birds that will score 93, possibly 93½, and may get an exceptional bird that will score higher. If you are breeding parti-colored birds of some breed where double matings are necessary for best results you might get a high percentage of birds that will score at least two points higher than the parent stock although 92½ is a very good score for most of the parti-colored varieties. Eggs may be kept from four to six weeks and even longer, but two to three weeks should be the limit. They should be turned daily. Eggs should be set just as soon as possible after they are laid.

Question.—We would like to have you decide a question between two breeders regarding the double mating system of Barred Rocks. A. claims that double mating is to mate two cockerel bred hens and two pullet bred hens to an exhibition cock or cockerel. B. claims that double mating is to mate four cockerel bred hens to a cockerel bred cock or cockerel and four exhibition hens, pullet bred, to a pullet bred cockerel.

Answer.—The age of the birds and the number mated has nothing at all to do with the matter. Double mating is the system of using birds of different shades of color to produce Standard colored birds. In order to produce Standard colored exhibition males, a male bird of Standard color is mated to females a few shades darker than Standard. The males from this mating will be good in color and the females very much too dark. To produce Standard colored exhibition females a male a few shades lighter than the Standard is mated to females that are Standard. The females from this mating will be of the proper color, but the males will be much too light.

Question.—Is it possible to tell by the shape of a hen egg whether it will produce a male or female chick, as can be done with goose eggs? Is there any way of tempering the shell of an egg, in which the chick is about ready to come out, so that the weaker chicks can get out of the shell? Will you please tell me the points that are necessary to make a Barred Rock and a White Rock conform to the Standard?

Answer.—It is absolutely impossible to fortell the sex of the chick by the shape of the egg. It cannot be done with goose eggs nor with any other kind. Sometimes it is claimed that unusually long and pointed eggs will produce males and that abnormally round eggs will produce females. It is fallacy pure and simple. Sprinkling eggs liberally with quite warm water is supposed to soften and weaken the shells of eggs ready to hatch, but we would not advise doing it. It generally does more harm than good. We would have to quote the complete Standard description to answer your last question and we cannot do this because the book is copyrighted by the American Poultry Association and the contents cannot be reproduced to any degree that would be of value.

Question.—Will Rhode Island Reds do well near Tampa, Florida, that are raised in Ohio? Are there any "mites" or other chicken pests there that are not known here; if so, what is the nature of them?

Answer.—Any variety of fowls bred anywhere will do well in Florida or any other state. Lice are just as plentiful, but the fowls are also troubled with fleas and sometimes by an insect that seems to burrow under the skin and stick there with considerable persistency.

Question.—I have a hen that lays eggs with a clot of blood in them and I have a friend who has birds of the same kind in his flock. Please inform me, if possible, what the cause of this is.

Answer.—Oftentimes a hen for various reasons will be forced to lay in a strain sufficient to burst one or more of the minute blood vessels in the egg organs or passages and these drops of blood come in contact with the egg before the shell is formed over it. Eggs containing these blood spots are generally from overfat hens.

Question.—I would like to ask for information regarding the condition of a Light Brahma cockerel. The bird has from all appearances a grain of corn lodged in his windpipe. I can move it up and down for a distance of 5 inches. I have made several attempts to work it out the mouth, but have always failed. He is apparently well otherwise and eats well. It causes him to breathe with difficulty and seems to have completely ruined him as a breeder. Any information or method as how to proceed in the case will be greatly appreciated.

Answer.—You are probably mistaken in regard to the location of the obstruction. It is, perhaps, in the throat or in the passage to the crop, but wherever it is, it ought to be easily dislodged either through the mouth or into the crop. It may be a tumor of some kind and if so a surgical operation will be necessary to remove it. This would be difficult and could hardly be done successfully through written instructions. We would suggest that you treat the bird as for canker or similar throat affection.

"When do you get your chickens out?" asked a neighbor. "I don't get them out at all—they and the hen do that," was the reply.

The hen, though an essential part of the egg plant, is not specially partial to that vegetable.

"Alas! I have reached my declining days," said the poultry man when he received an order for stock which he couldn't fill because he had sold out his surplus.

"De fo'ce of grabitation," said Unk Rastus, "am like dis: A chicken coop jes nachully draws a cullud gemman to it, an' he kain't seem to git away from it no how. Dat's like grabitation—he grabitates to de coop and grabs de chicken in it."

ENGLAND'S BEST BLACK ORPINGTONS. My brother, the Rev. Thos. W. Sturges, one of England's foremost fanciers, author of "Poultry Culture for Profit" and "The Poultry Manual," winner of over three thousand prizes, visited me in September bringing me a pen of his famous blacks, bred from his international prize winners. I won second ckl. and third pullet at the Mo. Valley Exposition, my birds being only four months old. Two months later at the great Mo. state show at Convention Hall, Kansas City, I showed two pullets and won first and third prizes, against very strong competition. At 15th Annual Poultry Show, Leavenworth, Kan., January, 1911, I won on my Black Orpingtons 1st hen, 1st and 2d ckl., 1st, 2d and 3d pullet; 1st pen; $5 in gold for highest scoring pen, and 3 special ribbons by National Black Orpington Club. Only a few settings of eggs for sale this season, 15 for $10. Two fine imported ckls. for sale. Harry Sturges, Independence, Mo. Member Nat. Blk. Orp. Club and Mo. State Poultry Association. 32

"Ringlet" First Prize Exhibition Pen and Winners of Sweepstakes Silver Cup at Madison Square Garden, New York.

"RINGLETS" SET THE SEAL OF CHAMPIONSHIP

AT THE IMPERIAL SHOW OF ALL AMERICA,
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, NEW YORK
THIS WINTER OF 1910 AND 1911

E. B. THOMPSON'S BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS win as follows:

First prize on cock, first and third on Cockerels; first and second on Exhibition Pens; the Imperial Prize of the show, special for Champian Male; Diploma presented by the Am. Poultry Association for best Cockerel; special for four best Cockerels; Sterling Silver sweepstakes Cup for best Plymouth Rock hatched in 1910, male or female, any variety, Challenge Silver Cup for best Exhibition Pen, won for third time and final Ownership; special for best pen mated to produce Exhibition Cockerels; special for best colored Male; special for best shaped Male; $25 special prize presented by the New York Show for finest display. Three times as many first prizes as any competitor. More first prizes than all competitors combined. All Silver Cups and Cash Specials.

My exhibit was one of the wonders of the show, every bird wearing the matchless "Ringlet" barring.

My three First Prize Males stood out like Stars.
My First Prize Champion Cockerel is the finest of All time.

This new Championship Record stands monumental above all other records—an achievement far and beyond anything ever hitherto accomplished by any Barred Rock breeder since the New York Show was founded. Furthermore, every Silver Trophy that has ever been offered on Barred Rocks at Madison Square Garden to be won three times has been finally won by me and is now my absolute property. This includes the $100 Challenge Trophy and the $100 Association Cup.

For more than 20 years at New York my "Ringlet" victories have been complete. The "Ringlet" record of First on Exhibition Pen three years in succession is the undisputed champion. My clean sweep of 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th prizes on Pullets has never been approached in Madison Square Garden and stands alone and unequalled.

1000 grand breeding cockerels for sale; elegant hens and pullets in any number. Show birds fit to win in any competition. Richly illustrated 60-page catalogue upon request, it is full of original pictures of New York Winners from life.

Regal Eggs Hatch Well

Many people believe that eggs from pure bred fowls do not hatch well but this is a mistake where the breeding stock is vigorous and properly handled.

Last season I sent thirty eggs from prize matings to Mr. E. H. Demsey, Arkadelphia, Ark., a distance of twelve hundred miles, and the following is Mr. Demsey's sworn statement:

State of Arkansas, County of Clark,

Personally came and appeared before me the undersigned authority, E. H Demsey, to me well known, who, after being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says that he ordered and received thirty Regal eggs from John S. Martin, of Port Dover, Ontario, Canada; that he used these thirty eggs for setting purposes and successfully hatched thirty healthy chickens out of the thirty eggs set. (Signed) F. H. DEMSEY

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of May, 1910

(Signed) C. W. TROUSDALE, Notary Public

Most of the winners for next winter's shows will be hatched in May and June.
Are you going to hatch some winners?

Price of eggs from prize matings $5 per 15, $9 per 30, $12 per 45, and $24 per 100.

The Sure Way To Poultry Profits

Makes healthier and more productive hens

Prof. James E. Rice, of Cornell University, says: "We have found Zenoleum a very satisfactory disinfectant in connection with our incubator and brooder work—our experience would justify our continuing to use Zenoleum."

Destroy Lice and Mites and Prevent the Spreading of Infectious Diseases

One who does not take proper care of his poultry has as much chance to raise them profitably as the man who tries to fill a sieve with water—it is absolutely necessary to keep poultry free from lice, mites and all disease-breeding germs and filth. When this is done, when they are given a fair chance, poultry will make you profits which, compared with the capital invested, are greater than in any other line of legitimate business. You can obtain these profits, easily and with hardly any effort, by the use of

Disinfectant, Won't Poison, Won't Explode, Won't Burn

ZENOLEUM

Has a Clean, Wholesome, Inoffensive, and Pleasing Odor

A Carbolic, Cresol, Coal-Tar Preparation "The Surest Lice Killer and Disinfectant"

A single quart is all that is necessary to rid 100 hens of lice, mites and germ filth—it cures and prevents all ordinary poultry ailments and diseases—contains nothing that is injurious — insures cleanliness and safeguards your poultry's health and your own profits. It is "the best coal-tar, carbolic, cresol disinfectant dip made" and an absolute necessity to every farmer and poultry raiser.

Sold Everywhere —and positively guaranteed to be satisfactory. If Zenoleum is not all we say it is—or even what you think it ought to be, you can have your money back—no argument, no letters, just money. Ask your dealer first, but insist upon Zenoleum and don't take a substitute—if he can't supply you, we will deliver to your station, charges prepaid—1 gal., $1.50; 5 gal., $6.25. 8-oz. size, 25c at your dealers, 35c from us prepaid. Equally beneficial for live stock. Write for free books, "Chicken Chat" and "Veterinary Adviser—the latter is invaluable to stockmen. Your name on a postal will do.

The Zenner Disinfectant Co., 203 Lafayette Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Hatches a greater number of healthy chicks and protects them from disease.

Prof. W. R. Graham, of Ontario Agricultural College, says: "The addition of Zenoleum proved of the greatest value in maintaining the vitality of the chicks—producing 9% more. I would use this substance in every machine set." Send for official report.

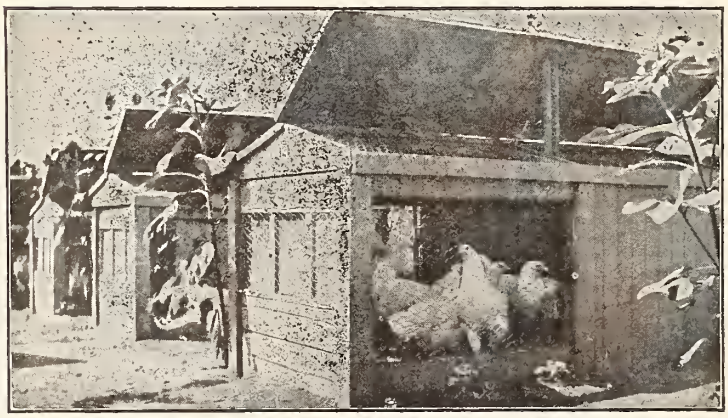
A GOOD LIVING

$1,500.00 from 60 Hens in Ten Months on a City Lot 40 Feet Square



Note the condition of the three months' old pullets at the School Farm. These pullets and their ancestors for seven generations have never been allowed to run outside the coops.

TO the average poultryman that would seem impossible and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden 40 feet wide by 40 feet long, we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practiced by the American people, still it can be accomplished by the

Philo System

The Philo System Is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry

and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success

from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks

are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler without any loss, and the broilers are of the very best quality, bringing here 3 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-Months-Old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each Per Month

in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using.

Our new book, THE PHILO SYSTEM OF POULTRY KEEPING, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell

One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel

Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves 2 Cents on Each Chicken

No lamp required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps, or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Testimonials

South Britain, Conn., April 19, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have followed your system as close as I could; the result is a complete success. If there can be any improvement on nature your brooder is it. The first experience I had with your System was last December. I hatched 17 chicks under two hens, put them as soon as hatched in one of your brooders out of doors and at the age of three months I sold them at 35c a pound. They then averaged 2½ pounds each, and the man I sold them to said they were the finest he ever saw, and he wants all I can spare this season. Yours truly,

A. E. NELSON.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—No doubt you will be interested to learn of our success in keeping poultry by the Philo System. Our first year's work is now nearly completed. It has given us an income of over $500.00 from six pedigree hens and one cockerel. Had we understood the work as well as we now do after a year's experience, we could have easily made $1,000.00 from the six hens. In addition to the profits from the sale of pedigree chicks, we have cleared over $960.00 running our hatchery plant, consisting of 56 Cycle hatchers. We are pleased with the results and expect to do better the coming year. With best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours, (MRS.) C. P. GOODRICH.

FROM POULTRY

The Poultry Review

A Monthly Magazine Devoted to Progressive Methods of Poultry Keeping

The Poultry Review is edited by E. W. Philo, author of the Philo System Book and founder of the Philo National Poultry Institute.

It is edited and printed on a practical poultry farm, where experiments are being conducted and reported in full in the Review. New discoveries and improvements are described and illustrated, and each issue contains a number of letters of experience and suggestion from followers of the Philo System.

Rev. W. W. Cox, our associate editor, is conducting a Philo System Plant, and his "Notes from a Six Hen Plant" in each issue have created considerable interest, and contain much valuable instruction. The first year's work on this plant netted over $500.

In addition to the best original articles it is possible to obtain, a review of the best articles from over a hundred publications is made—the "cream" of the poultry press arranged for the busy reader.

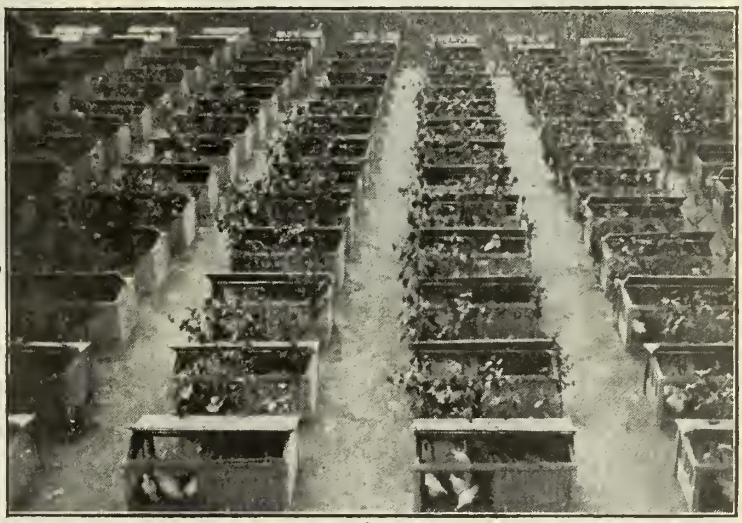

Photo taken from the roof of the Philo National Poultry Institute, showing a portion of the Poultry Plant where there are now over 5,000 pedigreed White Orpingtons on less than half an acre of land.

Another thing that is proving of great value to our subscribers is our Information Department. Our editors are always ready to help subscribers. When any difficult problem arises and you see no way of solving it, write us, and we will give you a prompt personal reply. It is quite probable that we have had a similar experience and can help you. Although no charge is made for this service, it is worth many times the subscription price.

For 1911 the Poultry Review guarantees the largest circulation of any paper of its kind—over 100,000 copies monthly, reaching the best class of poultrymen in every state and over thirty foreign countries.

TESTIMONIALS

E. R. Philo, Publisher Poultry Review, Elmira, N. Y. Box 214, Medicine Hat, Alta., Can., April 16, 1910.

Dear Sir:—Of all the poultry journals I take, I would fail in all rather than in the Review as I really like your paper the best of them all. Now I do not say this to curryfavor, nor for any other purpose, because I really like your paper for the pithy and sound articles. There is no dry reading in it as there is in other poultry journals, such as accounts of poultry shows that do not really concern any one but those who are written about. I do not think that any one in any part of the country cares who wins and who does not. It is all right in a local show, written and published by a local paper. Well, success and great success for the Review, and I hope to receive it regularly in the future.

Very sincerely yours,
R. G. Wetmore.

A Little Poultry and a Living

Is the title of a booklet we will mail free. It was written by the author of the Philo System book, who makes everyone of his hens pay him a proft of $50 to $100 each

Cycle Brooder Hatcher, a complete all metal, fire-proof hatching and brooding plant for only $8.00.

The All-Metal, 50-egg Cycle Hatcher only $6.00, complete.

Our New Discoveries Make Poultry Keeping Easy and Profits Sure

Our machines were used exclusively in the original Philo System plant, where over $1,500 FROM 60 HENS IN TEN MONTHS has been cleared from the sale of eggs, baby chicks and fowls, raised on a city lot 40 feet square. One of the largest hatching plants in America saved over $700 this year by using our system of brooding. We sell the best brooder ever made for only $2.50.

One party hatched and raised $500 worth of poultry last year with four metal mothers, and hundreds of others are delighted with our machines and our new way of raising poultry. Our combined machine hatches and broods perfectly at the same time, with only one lamp and one-fifth the oil used in other machines. Once filling the lamp completes the hatch. It runs as steadily as a clock in any room from cellar to garret, and our Long Burning Safety Lamp runs on for weeks without attention. It is the only machine that airs the eggs in the natural way and applies the heat to the chicken like the mother hen.

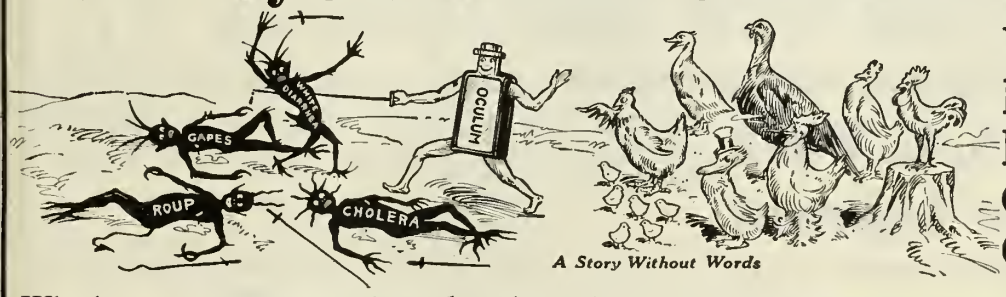
The Only Sure Preventive and Remedy for



A Story Without Words

White Diarrhea Roup Gapes Cholera

Whether you are an experienced poultry raiser or are just starting into this interesting and profitable occupation, you can't afford to overlook this scientific Cure and Preventive.

If your poultry is seized with White Diarrhea, Roup, Gapes or Cholera, remember "Oculum" cures the most obstinate cases. This wonderful, new discovery drives the hateful germs of disease out of the blood. A dose administered easily once or twice a year is an absolute safeguard from future trouble.

It's easier to prevent disease than cure it. "Oculum" does both. It drives the germs out—KEEPS THEM OUT.

"OCULUM"

Registered Trade-Mark

"Oculum" not only prevents and cures ducks, chickens, turkeys, pigeons and other poultry, of these sickening diseases, but it is the BEST GENERAL TONIC KNOWN.

Increases egg yield, keeps down lice, builds weight, cuts down mortality, takes birds safely through moulting season, keeps them in prime condition when shipped, and makes bigger poultry profits a certainty. And it cuts out eternal drudgery.

From Bradley Bros., Lee, Mass.
"Oculum" appears to be the long-needed remedy for cases of liver and bowel trouble, heretofore regarded as incurable. Have tried it also with satisfactory results upon a few cases of baby chicks—"incurables"—which bid fair to fully recover.

From A. G. Dustin, Rose Lawn Poultry Farm South Framingham, Mass.
I enclose $1.00 for bottle of "Oculum." I broke my bottle accidentally and find I cannot keep house without it, not so much for a cure-all as for a smart tonic. What about handling this for you?

From Mrs. Lloyd Perry, Marceline, Mo.
Send another bottle of "Oculum" and dropper. Had inoculated all my fowls but three, when "Oculum" gave out. I most always had an invalid among my flocks, but since I inoculated them I have not seen a droopy one.

Read what others say. Consider that what it has done for their birds it will just so surely do for yours. But don't take anyone's word for it. Ask for a sample. Try it on worse cases yourself. Send a dime for a few doses with a dropper and directions, or 25 cents for a full trial bottle. Better still, send $1.00 for a large bottle and prevent disease on big scale. Your money back if not as guaranteed. Government Diagnosis of Cholera and White Diarrhea—Free. Send for it.

Hancock Inoculatum Company (Incorporated)
Box C Salem, Va.

From Trexler Poultry Farm, Allentown, Pa.
"Oculum" works like magic. I have saved between eighty and one hundred dollars' worth of turkeys since I used "Oculum." If only the people would try it, I think nobody would be without it. I would not be without it for any price. Please send me another bottle.

From Oscar E. Miles Poultry Farm, Columbus, Ohio
I had a case of infectious canker in a $200 cockerel, followed by worst case of chicken pox I have ever seen. I treated bird with "Oculum" and effected a complete cure. I believe that the use of "Oculum" entirely destroys poisonous germs out of the system. I have bred fancy poultry twelve years as a business and I have never found a remedy I considered equal to "Oculum." I have inoculated all my chicks and have seen no evidence of white diarrhea, and have never had them grow so rapidly. (5)

Reasons Why Many People Fail in Poultry Breeding

Every Beginner in Poultry Raising Should Read This Article Carefully, and All Older Breeders Who Are Not Successful May Find Some of the Reasons Herein.

BY C. E. PETERSEN.

MANY of the so-called mistakes in the poultry business do not "happen"; they are the direct results of causes that can be traced back to the person or persons who in the first instance engaged in the business.

A great amount of time, money, and opportunity is yearly lost in making mistakes and afterwards trying to rectify them, which means more loss of time, and still more expenditure of money and energy. All of which might have been saved if in the beginning measures had been taken to prevent them, and though it is well to correct our mistakes when we find them out it is far better to prevent them and therefore let us trace some of the usual causes responsible for the many mistakes made in the business of poultry raising.

Carelessness and Inattention to Detail.

There is no business that we know of in which the neglect of the little things works out such disastrous results as in the poultry business, and simply because the whole business is built up of little duties and attentions to the daily need of the stock. Carelessness and inattention to the details of these combined needs finally works out complete failure and loss.

The few chicks and old birds that have the entire range of the place will manage to look out for themselves somehow and find the needed requirements for growth and maintenance, but where the number of chickens goes into the hundreds and the range limited it needs our constant care and attention to grow these chicks to proper maturity.

Regularity in the feeding, and the feeding of the proper rations consisting of all the necessary elements for health and growth, is so much of an essential that a loss of a few days in the progress in growth of the young stock may, later on, mean the loss, pound for pound, of every cent of profit that otherwise might have accrued.

Absolutely nothing should be trusted to luck, and the usual "guess that will be enough," but proper care should be given constantly and grit, water, scraps, green food, dust-baths, and other essentials for the comfort of the young stock should at no time be lacking.

What is the use of raising a fine flock of chickens and then because it is a little trouble to do the right thing, leave them at the mercy of invading rodents and other vermin? Go through every house at night, see that every bird is all right and comfortable; close doors and all windows in front of which wire screen has not been put, but these are essentials for success and necessities in every poultry yard and ought to be in front of both doors and windows.

Don't trust to the wire fence surrounding the yards that this will keep out intruders, for it will not do so. We have known a skunk to dig under a foot-board that was sunk into the ground and then locate under a poultry house and nightly cause destruction and loss before he was discovered to be an inmate of the poultry yard. Trust nothing to luck, but give careful attention to every detail unless you want to invite failure.

Another fruitful cause of failure is the carelessness of not keeping an account of expenditures and income and though this sounds almost incredible, there are a number of breeders of our acquaintance and breeders of note at that, that could not tell you how much they paid out for the grain used at their plant last year if I should ask them. It keeps things from going too far down hill if accounts are kept and puts the business on a basis of sound knowledge, rather than on the guess-so plan of procedure.

Another carelessness is in the neglect of keeping a stock book. No success can be secured in the breeding of fine poultry without it, and there would be less borrowing of birds for exhibition if a little more care and attention to the details of breeding birds for exhibition was followed. No man can work in the dark regarding the propensities of his stock and expect to succeed. The man who depends on matings made up on the "hope-so" plan will become a dead failure in the production of fine stock, and it is in this particular that so many men find their Waterloo, and it is the careful, exacting breeder who knows the records of his birds, pedigrees that go back to the very start of his operations, who comes home the conqueror, and his assurance of being able to produce birds of high quality is grounded on the foundation of a well-studied knowledge of the science of breeding.

Lack of Foresight and Preparation.

The above caption is particularly applicable to the profit side of the business which is more often than not lost because of the lack of a little forethought and preparation.

How many mistakes that are made yearly in the lack of preparation we shall never know, but we do know enough of the more prominent to show what we mean.

No man should make the mistake of raising more stock than he can properly house and care for, and yet this mistake is a common cause of failure. It is easy to take care of five or six hundred little chicks when a few small buildings will accommodate them during the warm summer months, but as they grow into maturity the quarters become too small, filth begins to accumulate too fast altogether, and then follow several days of rain and bad weather with insufficient quarters for the birds and then loss upon loss, with consequent discouragement and all because no proper plans were made in the start, to take care of the chicks when they got to the state of growth when ten times as much room would be required for their comfort that it took in the first few weeks of their existence.

In this case it is well enough to count your chicks before they are hatched and figure out beforehand how much room it will take to properly accommodate the number required, and if a man cannot afford to build enough good shelter to accommodate the chicks, keep on cutting down the number till the ones expected can be properly housed in what you have on hand or can afford to construct.

Another case of lack of forethought is to be ignorant of the current prices for market poultry. It invites failure to send stock to market when the prices are lowest, when the same amount of stock could under proper management and care have been sent when the market price for that kind of stock was the highest, and sometimes a very few days will make a considerable difference in the profits.

In the building of a new house the same lack of forethought is made visible in the number of poorly constructed and poorly situated buildings we so often see, and many times the failure was simply due to the tendency of the builder to build the house for himself, rather than for the poultry it was to accommodate.

Take time, study, plan, investigate, and find out

Winner of first as pullet at Michigan State Fair, September, 1909, and first as hen at Iowa State Fair, September, 1910. Bred and owned by Geo. B. Ferris, 554 North Union, Grand Rapids, Mich.

what sort of a house would give the best results, count the cost before you build, cost of money, cost of expenditure of labor, and by the last phrase we mean that the house should be so constructed that it can be run in the easiest possible way and save time and labor for the attendant.

Take due precaution as to its location, for a house may be well placed in the summer and be placed dead wrong for the winter months and so prepare for the cold and the snow, and shelter from the winds, and let the windows of the house face the winter sun as much as possible, for it is when the orb of day hangs low that its life-giving beams are most needed. Shade is good during the hot summer months, but in the bleak long winter we want the sun and as much of it as we can get.

And while we are on this matter of house building for poultry let me give one other warning: never use an old piece of board in a new house, however good it may look, if it has been used in the construction of an old coop or an old poultry building. We have known a fine building infested with vermin a month after it was built by this lack of forethought, because the piece or two of old lumber used was infested with mites and at the proper time they hatched out every nit, and no dead ones in the shell, and this leads us to our next mistake.

False Economy and Desire for Gain.

There was nothing saved in the use of the few boards as above mentioned as it was a miserable blunder that caused our friend so much vexation and so much trouble that he finally had to desert the house and for a whole season it stood empty and useless.

It is false economy to try to economize in the quantity and quality of food used to rear our poultry, as it is not a matter of how long it will take to feed out a bag or a ton of food, but how quickly we can make them eat and digest it, for the quicker the right kind of food gets into their digestive apparatus the quicker it will come out on their body, and the quicker it comes out on good, healthy, steady growth the quicker it will be exchanged for cash.

Any economy based on the gain of a few cents in the buying of damaged grain is simply so much loss, and there is a good big doubt in my mind whether damaged poultry food is worth the buying at any price, be it ever so low.

The real economy in the feeding of poultry so as to obtain the best results in the shortest possible time, for market poultry and for the production of eggs, is to buy the best grade of everything, and then to blend it in the right proportions so as to get out of it all the food value it contains.

It is economy to save food in the way of not wasting it, but it is poor economy to see how far a lot of grain can be made to go by feeding it out in scanty rations, and such action only invites failure. There is a great deal said about overfeeding, but it is my private opinion that there is a lot more underfeeding done than overfeeding. Young stock in particular cannot very easily be overfed. They will eat all they can get and they ought to have it, but at regular times, and some food ought to be given in hoppers that they can help themselves whenever they need it.

It is the greatest possible mistake to stint the poultry as far as floor space of the buildings is concerned. Overcrowded houses are always a source of sickness and ill health, and this in turn means that egg production will suffer to such an extent that profits from the fowls will be out of the question.

From twenty-five to fifty fowls in a house is enough for good profitable laying and from five to ten square feet of floor space about right for each hen, though the smaller the number of occupants, the larger the floor space needed for each hen.

Failure to Take Due Precautions.

In all kinds of business enterprises this is an item of much importance and in any well managed establishment it is never neglected and the same should hold true in the poultry business as well.

There are so many contingencies that cannot be put down to take place at any given time that all we can do is to be prepared for them when they do come. Some morning, for instance, it looks like it might be a stormy day and precautions must be taken so as to be ready to safeguard the chicks from being taken in it unaware.

If the chicks are let out at all under these conditions, some one should be at hand on the first sign of rain to get them back into their brooders and houses, for it is sudden death if a flock of little chicks are left out in a rain storm to be drenched to the skin. They will crowd into some corner with heads up in the air and stand there till drowning finishes the work.

First prize pen of Barred Rocks at Eastern Maine State Fair, Bangor, Me., 1910. Bred and owned by E. B. Sweet, Route 1, East Holden, Me.

More chickens are lost annually throughout the country by the neglect of taking due precautions against emergencies of all kinds than from any other source. Make provisions for shade, and if there are no shade trees in your runs, when the day makes promise of being hot and sultry take the precaution to put up shades in all the chicken runs. Better do too much than not enough.

If the business is run on a small scale and hens are used instead of incubators, always have a few extra broody hens on hand; much loss in time and chicks may be saved by this precaution.

Another mistake often made is to wait till the vermin are there before cleaning out the houses; an ounce of prevention is better than several pounds of cure. Never take anything for granted in this matter; always take the precaution to oil the roosts, whitewash the walls and sprinkle floors with some sanitary preparation. There is absolutely no need to have houses filthy either from dirt or vermin; cleanliness is necessary to success and filth of all kinds invites failure.

Wrong Theories and Biased Advice.

And if there is a greater stone of stumbing in the poultry business I do not know where, and there is not one of us that, if on the square, will not plead guilty to the above statement. For how many, every day, with all our knowledge, accept appearances as facts and without any investigation whatsoever, and whatever wrong statements may be propounded by brainless investigators who probably have axes to grind of their own, or are failures themselves in profitable poultry management, though perhaps of interest, they are no good to establish a profitable poultry business on.

I can give no better advice regarding this matter than what I myself have learned by years of experience, namely, to accept nothing that you read about or are advised to do till you have proven for yourself whether it is fact or fiction. What will answer in one place will not answer in some other place, and what will make one breed of poultry thrive and do well on will not answer for another breed.

One make of incubator will answer all purposes poses for which it was made with one person, but some other person cannot get the same results from it. Local conditions may be responsible; the kind of stock may have a good deal to do with it.

One person favors the mash fed in the morning and expiates on the good results obtained; another feeds it in the evening and gets as good results, and still another feeds none at all and does as well, while another who follows the advice of one and all of these methods gets no results at all. The fact remains that what has proven to you to give good results in the locality in which you live is the method for you to follow and never change it till you are absolutely convinced that the change will minister to still better results. For, what we are all after is not theories but results, and until my theories or yours have proven themselves practicable by actual trial, don't try to work them out in poultry for profit; it is failure. These are the chief causes of errors in the poultry business of today though of course many more might be mentioned, and if I did, it would be

The Wrong of Holding Out False Hopes.

Many a man has lost his all and sold out the odds and ends of what was left of his venture into the poultry business a wiser though not by any means a man friendly toward the business in which he failed, and if we are to place the responsibility it would be on the men who by false statements held out hopes that never could have been realized.

The poultry business needs men fit for the business, and it is not any and all that can succeed in it; there must be a love for the work and if that is not there, the chief element of success is lacking.

No use to hold out false hopes of success where this spirit is lacking. I may be mistaken, but I think I am safe in saying that every paying poultry business of today is the outcome of an inbred love for fancy stock, and the profit of secondary importance when the first small foundation of a later paying business was laid.

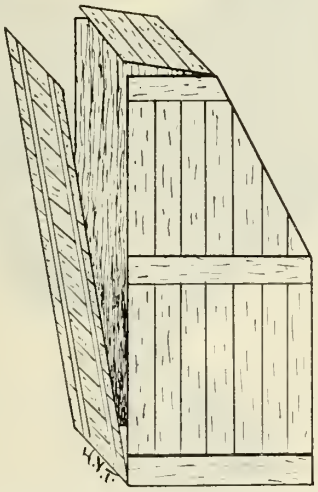
How to Make a Good Piano Box House

Plain and Simple Instructions Which Can Be Followed by Anyone. The Style of House Illustrated and Described Here Can Be Used in All Localities and on Both Large and Small Plants.

By H. V. TORMOHLEN.

A GREAT many people who raise poultry, either on a large or a small scale, will find the plans for a cheap poultry house given here are just the thing for which they have been looking. They will appeal especially to the city man who can keep but five or six hens and on rented property possibly, and alike to the large poultry raiser for colony houses to be moved about the farm in the green fields during the summer. There are hundreds of these colony houses in use on the largest poultry farms in the country.

The ease with which the house can be built commends it to those who are not skilled as carpenters and who do not have the time to build an elaborate house. The house is modeled on the most approved lines of poultry house construction, being a combination of the open and canvas front types, and having the shelf dropping board under the roost, which is along the back wall, to catch all the droppings while the fowls are on the roost during the night. If a small breeding pen is kept in the house the space beneath the dropping board is utilized for nests and the floor, which is covered with several inches of straw, for scratching.

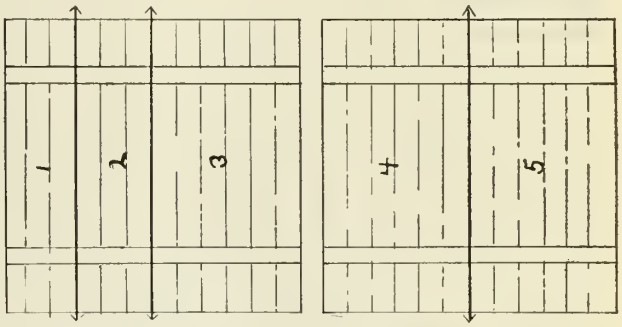


Two piano boxes of the same size, with tops and lids removed, are required for the house. (See article on this page.)

Piano boxes for different makes of pianos differ slightly in size. The ordinary box is from five feet to six feet in height by five, or a little over, long, the back generally being square. They are two and a half to two and three-quarters feet wide at the bottom.

After getting two piano boxes of the same dimensions we remove the backs and tops as shown in the illustration. The backs are then spread out as shown and sawed in the portions indicated by the arrowed lines. The one back is sawed into halves while the other is sawed into halves and one of these halves halved again. These quarters form the topmost part of the roof with an additional six or eight inch board.

The second half numbered 3 forms the floor between the two boxes. Half of number 4 fits in at the back between the two boxes while number 5 is used for the dropping board. All the additional lumber required for the house is the two by fours under the floor and for the roof and some one by fours for the door. No glass windows are required for the house as the light is admitted through the open front door. The door is merely covered with wire netting. During a very cold winter night a canvas curtain is hung over the wire netting and fastened onto buttons on the frame of the door. As the whole house is covered with tarred paper or some good roofing paper it is surprising how comfortable and warm the fowls keep in this style of house and yet with the canvas off the front of the door almost every day in the year. Only about three months of the year need the canvas be used in the central states even at night, as the more fresh air the better after the fowls become accustomed to this mode of housing. The general tone and health of the flock is greatly benefited by the fresh air type of house.



The two backs of boxes are cut as shown by the arrow lines in above illustration. The method is described in full in accompanying article.

These houses make excellent ones in which to keep an out-door brooder early in the season and they may be used at every stage of the work of poultry raising.

The Early Eggs Unfertile As Usual

Argument in Support of the Theory that Late Winter and Early Spring Months Are Not the Natural Breeding Season and That Strongly Fertile Eggs Should Not Be Expected Until Later.

BY H. S. BABCOCK.

THIS season is no exception to other seasons in the annual crop of complaints. The early eggs have hatched poorly, and breeders have to exercise their ingenuity in finding out the reason why.

The coldness of March is the most obvious explanation of the poor hatches this year. March was, indeed, a cold month, and cold has a disastrous effect upon the fertility of eggs. This is certainly true, and it might be accepted as the final reason, if in other years, when March was not an exceptionally cold month, a like result had not followed. But as we look back over the past, and find that every year has brought its burden of complaint in respect to poor hatching of early eggs, we find ourselves in doubt as to the sufficiency of the explanation.

There is another explanation which possibly may not be open to the same objection. We are not to forget that "What is bred in the bone remains long in the flesh." The fowl has been domesticated for many centuries. And yet there was a time, somewhere in the mists of the ceuturies, when the fowl was a wild bird. And as it was once a wild bird, it may have retained even to this day some of the instincts of its feral condition. How long it will take to breed out such instincts who can tell? The Guinea fowl, though long bred by man, is still a half wild bird. The turkey, an earlier conquest by man, still retains many of its wild instincts and habits. And man, himself, is at bottom a savage. The fighting instinct occasionally breaks out, and even the mildest of men will thrill at the recount of a bloody fight. The nomadic instinct sets in motion not only the army of tramps but the well-to-do on their excursions to mountain, seashore and foreign lands. The wanderlust shows no signs of extinction. And it need be a matter of no surprise if there should remain in the long domesticated fowl some rudiments of its early wild life.

To be sure, during this long period of domestication the fowl has undergone remarkable modifications. In shape and color wonderful transformations have been made; in prolificacy its dozen or two dozen of eggs have been multiplied to eight, twelve and in a few cases even more than twenty dozen. The wild bird admits the advances of the male only during a portion of the year, while the domesticated fowl receives those advances at all seasons. Many feral habits have been profoundly modified or have wholly disappeared. And yet the hen still prefers a retired and secret place in which to lay her eggs, a clear survival of the wild habit of hiding her nest from enemies, and her early eggs do not hatch well. Is that, too, a survival of the old untamed life?

It would be natural to expect that those instincts which related to the perpetuation of the species would remain unmodified by domestication for the longest period. They are fundamental—the life of the species depends upon them. And so it is found that Guinea fowls, turkeys and even the hens hide their nests to safeguard their eggs and the expected young.

One of the instincts or habits of the wild fowl is to lay its eggs and hatch its broods when the springtime sun has warmed the air and the earth has awakened into new life. When nature furnishes the fit conditions the natural breeding season of the wild birds arrives. The eggs which they then lay are, as a rule, fertile, and each egg in time becomes a young bird. And if, once in a while, a wild bird is deluded by a premature spring, her eggs result in failures, and she has to lay another clutch or produce no young. May it not be, therefore, that even upon the domesticated hen, profoundly as she and her habits and instincts have been modified, the natural breeding season still exerts an influence, and that the real reason why early eggs do not hatch well is that the natural breeding season has not arrived? That they hatch at all shows that this cause is not unmodified—that it is slowly undergoing a change—but that they do not hatch so well as later in the season, may we not infer that the instincts, which lie back of the natural breeding season in the feral state, have not been entirely eradicated? There is a natural breeding season for wild birds and there may be for domesticated fowls, and that may be the reason for the infertility of early eggs.

May

A Budget of Timely Pointers upon Various Topics. In Many Ways the Month of May is the Most Important of the Entire Year for the Poultryman. Mistakes Made This Month Are Costly.

BY OBSERVER.

MAY is a month of much promise and no small amount of fulfillment.

The observant poultryman notes the tenderness of the springing grass and the mildness of the temperature as conditions favorable to the growth and development of young chickens.

April is a good month for hatching chickens; by some thought, all things considered, to be the best month in the rolling year. But if there be any one real best month for this purpose, we believe it to be "the merry month of May."

Weather conditions, save for an occasional shower, are ideal for the new broods. Green food is abundant and tender. Insect life is appearing. And the eggs are now at their best in respect to fertility and strength of germs. Chickens hatched this month will be strong and vigorous and will thrive from the start.

If there is any one thing more important than all others, in the rearing of chickens, it is the securing of steady growth. A chicken which experiences no retardation in its growth from the time of hatching to the time of maturity will show in its development its full possibilities, in size, shape and color. Setbacks are expensive—for the food consumed during the retardation the poultryman gets no return, and the chicken thus retarded in growth never becomes quite what it might have been had the growth been continuous. This truth will bear repeating.

The poultry breeder should get out as many broods as possible—or as his plant will accommodate—this month. The earlier broods are probably not sufficient, and now is the time to make good any deficit. To be sure June chickens are not to be despised, but May chickens have the call.

Every month is a good month for destroying vermin. One cannot begin too early nor can he continue the work too late. But one louse destroyed now is better than many destroyed later, for they breed with incredible rapidity. They may not be numerous in May, so it is a good time to kill them off. Whitewash will not do it, but boiling water will, kerosene will, carbolic acid will and many of the commercial insecticides will. It is best to do the work when it can be done most easily.

If one is so situated that his chickens can provide themselves with the green food which they require, it is well; if not so situated, he should supply their needs. Nothing comes amiss, but white clover is probably the best kind of green food for them. Every poultryman ought to have a white clover patch for this purpose, near the place where the chickens are confined, and cut it frequently with the lawn mower, so as to have the clover always young and tender.

If one is planning to build a permanent house with yards, let him provide two yards for each pen, and let these yards be seeded to white clover. The best method is to have these yards on opposite sides of the house; for instance, if the house runs east and west, the yards should be on the north and south sides. If they are of sufficient size the problem of supplying green food at the minimum expense of labor will be solved. The fowls can occupy the south yard the first season and the next season the north yard, the south being seeded down while they are in the north yard. By this method not only will green food be supplied but the ground will be prevented from becoming foul, and so the health of the fowls will be promoted as well as the labor of caring for them diminished.

Provide plenty of gates, and don't make them too narrow. There should be enough in number to make every yard easily accessible, and they should be wide enough to make the passage, with anything one wishes to carry, convenient. One doesn't wish to have to turn edgewise to get through them. Such a practice does not promote good feeling. Study convenience in all poultry appliances. The labor expense is an item usually ignored in reckoning up the profits on poultry keeping. When only a few fowls are kept it may be a negligible factor, but when many are kept it becomes a large item in the bill of expenses. So it pays in planning a poultry plant to keep convenience ever in mind, because, though conveniences may cost a little extra at the outset, they will pay for themselves many times over in the saving of labor.

Water should be kept constantly before the small chickens, but in dishes from which they can drink but into which they cannot get. It should be kept clean, and furnished frequently enough to be always cool. For adult fowls and especially for those laying freely, there should be a constant and abundant supply of water for drinking. The egg is composed of a large percentage of water and laying hens are hard drinkers. Every observant poultryman knows that the hens when in full lay will drink several times as much water as they will when they are "shy" in laying. And some go so far as to advocate salting the hens' food in order to increase their thirst so as to induce abundant laying. Although I heard this advice given at a poultry institute by a gentleman connected with an Experiment Station, I am not quite ready to indorse it; but of the necessity of furnishing an abundant supply of water, to meet the natural demand created by the production of eggs, there can be no doubt. If one thinks that the creation of an artificial thirst by feeding salted foods, and quenching this thirst by copious draughts of water, will increase the productiveness of his flocks, he might try the experiment.

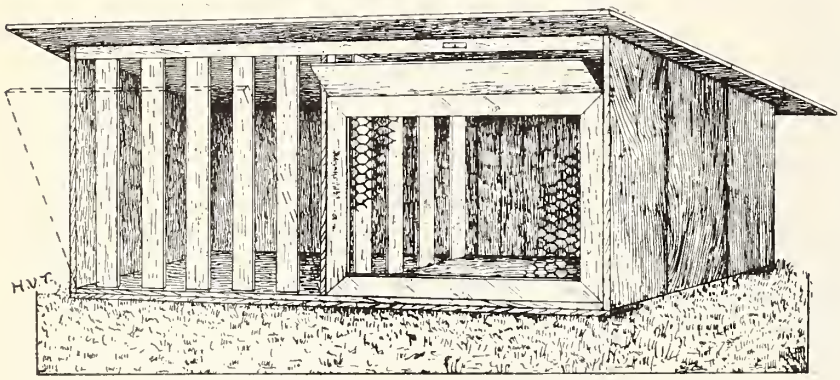
Coops for Hens and Chicks

Two Home-Made Coops for Hens with Broods of Chicks—These Coops Are Easily Made and Are Worth Many Times Their Cost

By H. V. TORMOHLEN.

THE hen expected to raise a large brood of chicks should be provided with the best quarters possible. The coop should admit plenty of sunshine, should be wind, water, and vermin proof. It should be cozy and dry and should afford easy access to all parts for cleaning and caring for the little chicks. The floor should be near enough the ground that the little chicks after getting out can easily find their way back and yet far enough off of the surface of the ground to insure dryness and prevent the harboring of rats. The coop should not be cumbersome or elaborate, yet it is advisable to build it substantially.

The box shaped coop shown in the illustration is well adapted to the needs of the small fancier with only a few broods to raise in his back yard, during the spring, or the large poultry raiser who raises large numbers of chicks with hens. It is built on the open colony type plan.

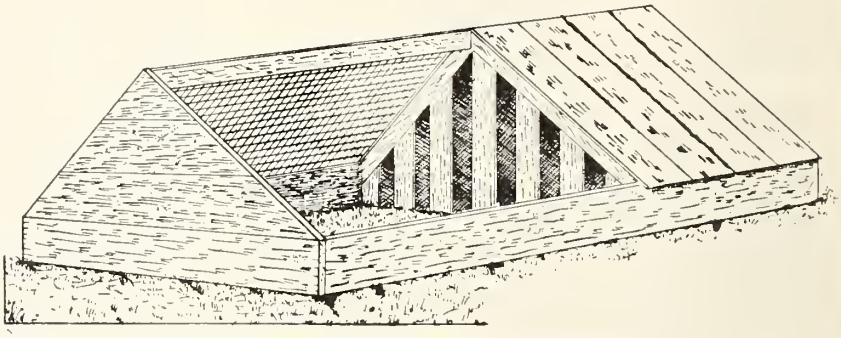


MR. TORMOHLEN'S COOP FOR HEN AND CHICKS.

The coop is 36 inches long by 18 inches wide, and 18 inches high in the rear and 24 inches high in front. It is divided into two compartments, making each compartment 18 inches square. Using these dimensions, even length lumber may be used with scarcely any waste. The two side walls and back are made tight fitting, and it is well to cover them with roofing paper, if tongue and groove siding is not used. The roof should be of light pine lumber covered with roofing material. Shingles are not adapted to this coop, or any coop or poultry house for that matter, as they require too steep an angle, thus requiring additional lumber, and, also, they harbor lice. All roofs for any kinds of poultry houses should be as flat as possible to hold the warmth down next to the fowls during the winter, and the same applies to cooping hen and chicks.

The compartment in which the hen is confined is to the left, and is divided from the one to the right by slats. The dotted lines represent the door, which is hinged at the bottom in front of this compartment, and acts as a platform in front of the coop during the day, and at night as a tight fitting door, excluding rain, wind, and rats alike. One or more of the slats in front should be made loose fitting, so the hen may be released.

The compartment to the right, or sun parlor, is fronted with a door covered with one-half inch mesh wire netting, which will exclude cats and weasels. A little trap door is made directly above the wire door, shown partly open in the illustration, and through which the feed and water is given to the chicks early in the morning before the dew is off the grass and while they should yet be confined. The little fellows cannot slip past your hand when fed through this door, as they do so often, to our great annoyance, when a door is opened near the floor through which to feed them. In this sun parlor the chicks can be fed the small chick food and delicate morsels too expensive to fill the old hen's crop with. The little chicks can feed here early in the morning on rainy days, and when it is too cold to let them out, unmolested. The hen is fed whole corn at the same time, and cannot trample or bother the chicks. When the dew is off the grass, and the chicks old enough to be given the run, the door-platform in front of the hen's apartment is dropped to the ground, and the chicks get out into the open directly from the mother hen's compartment while the hen is confined. This makes a most admirable and convenient way of caring for the hen and her brood. For convenience, the floor may be made to drop out and the roof hinged.



THE MODERNIZED "A" COOP DESCRIBED BY MR. TORMOHLEN.

The second illustration of a coop for hen and chicks is one of the old-fashioned "A" coops modernized. The frame work in front is covered with one-inch wire netting, and in this part the chicks may be fed apart from the hen, and given a grassy plot. A loose fitting floor is placed in the rear part, where the hen is kept. This coop may be moved about over the grass frequently, where the chicks cannot be given the liberty of the lawn. A trap door should be made at the back to get at the hen easily. A storm and sun shade may be made of three or four boards nailed together and leaned against the wire part on whichever side the sunshine or rain is coming from. It should be made to extend up about the coop at least 18 inches. You will note this coop is made wider and not so high as the old-fashioned "A"-shaped coop, to give the hen more room, make it more cozy by holding down the warmth.

Prepare Early for Green Food and Shade

Both of the Above Mentioned Items Are Absolute Necessities, but in Many Cases No Provision Whatever Is Made for Them and Thousands of Chicks Are Consequently Lost or Stunted in Their Growth.

By H. V. TORMOHLEN.

DURING the early part of May plans should be made to provide the poultry yards with liberal supplies of green food and plenty of shade for the coming summer. If quantities of fresh lawn clippings can be had during hot months it probably will not be necessary to plan further for the green food. but poultry enjoy so much to pick the greens fresh from the stem, and if only a small plot ten by ten feet can be fenced off in which to grow a little green food, it will serve to improve the general tone of the flock. It is the domestic fowl's habit to roam about in quest of food—not to tramp about on a bare plot of ground—during the whole season and, in keeping with nature's plans, the yard should be so arranged that half of it at least is under cultivation at one time growing a crop of some kind that the fowls enjoy and into which they may be released once a day at least for an hour or so. A plot of fresh earth under cultivation to which the fowls have access is a remedy for most ills of the poultry yard. If the poultry yard can not conveniently be divided into two parts for each pen of fowls and the flock turned into one or the other at will, then a corner or one end of the yard may be fenced off and spaded up for cultivation.

There are many different varieties of vegetation that poultry enjoy as green food. Indeed, the fowls are not at all particular, and, for this fact, it is all the easier for the poultry raiser to select some crop that is adapted to the location and soil as well as the season and length of time in which he has to grow it. Fowls are especially fond of short, tender blades of grass of almost any variety, of young oats and rye, of lettuce, the many different kinds of clover, alfalfa, rape and even of young dandelion plants.

A crop of oats is desirable in the early spring and summer, when plenty of moisture is a certainty, but, when sown later in the summer, the crop is likely to be a failure unless it can be watered. Oats is the most satisfactory green good where the board inclosure, with wire netting top, is used. Rye is sown only in the fall for early winter use.

All the surplus lettuce from the family garden and kitchen should be fed to the fowls, and when the patch in the garden becomes too tough for family use it should be fed to the flock as quickly as possible before it goes to seed and becomes useless.

Clover and alfalfa, like the grasses, require too long a time and too much work to be used by the small poultry raiser as an exclusive crop for the fowls, but where these succulent plants can be obtained and fed with little trouble they are a most excellent green food.

Rape is one of the nutritious greens where moisture is a certainty, and it can be sown any time from April to August. It can not be recommended too highly as green food, as it grows rapidly and will stand much more drought than anything else that can be planted. Rape is ready to use in three or four weeks, depending upon the time of year. The fowls may be allowed the run of the patch for a half hour or so every other day at first. After the growth is well established the time may be prolonged until the fowls can be kept in it all the time, and the other half of the yard spaded up and sown in the same manner. The winter or biennial varieties should be sown. The dwarf Essex or English is the most widely cultivated.

A very good plan in sowing a plot for green food for poultry is to mix several different kinds of seeds. In this way the fowls get what they crave most and the conditions under which they live are made much more natural. A mixture of oats, lettuce, millet and rape furnishes an excellent food and a quick growing crop. A few cowpea seeds may be added, as the fowls like the leaves from this plant.

Feed a variety of foods, not because "Variety is the spice of life," but because the hens will then be sure to get some of the things they need.

There is little excuse for the bare sun beaten poultry yard so often seen when natural shade can be so easily provided with a little forethought in the spring. The poultry yard can be made as attractive as the front lawn with a few landscape gardening rules applied. The soil about the yard is generally very rich and very little care need be given the shade producing plants after the earth has been spaded up once and the plants protected from the fowls. Of course, the orchard is the ideal place for fowls but, lacking this, shade from shrubs, small fruit trees, vines and different tall annual plants will serve. Quince and lilac bushes may be grown in the poultry yard if they are inclosed with a small fence the first two years. A row of blackberry and raspberry bushes may be planted along the south fence. Morning glory and wild cucumber vines will make profuse shade on the wire netting fence in a few weeks. The tall varieties of sunflowers hide unattractive places and the seed is the best poultry conditioner and fattener that can be had. When used in combination with vines the sunflower makes a very pleasing background.

Don't waste good poultry food on miserable, weakly chickens. The sooner they are disposed of the greater will be your profit. They eat the food and take the room that belong to the vigorous specimens.

There is a great saving in labor if one keeps his poultry houses filthy and allows vermin to multiply without hindrance. For example, there will be few or no eggs to collect, cleaning operations will be avoided, and fumigation, whitewashing, spraying, and the like, will be unnecessary. There will, also, be no profits to look after.

Building a Business and a Reputation

The poultry business is necessarily, to a very large degree, what is known as a mail order business. Buyer and seller are separated by long distances and often are total strangers to each other. They are introduced to each other through the medium of an advertisement and extend their acquaintance by means of correspondence. In every such business, confidence is the only foundation upon which it can rest securely.

Everything possible should be done to encourage the growth of this confidence. If, as it has been said, "Confidence is a plant of slow growth," there is an even greater need to cultivate this plant. Just how this shall be done is by no means so clear as the necessity of the doing.

The most obvious way of cultivating confidence is by strict honesty in every business transaction. Misrepresentation, extravagant and unfounded claims, sharp tricks, all these things are to be avoided. In every sale a dollar's worth should be given for a dollar, or even something more than that. Every honest deal increases the confidence of the buying public, just as every dishonest practice decreases it. Poultry breeders as a body should unitedly discourage even the appearance of dishonesty in every member, for "United we stand, divided we fall." And in saying this, we do not mean to imply that poultrymen as a body are not strictly honest. We implicitly believe, and this belief is based upon good foundations, that the poultry breeders of this country make a body of men than whom no more honest body of men can be found. Even if by nature they are not more honest than others, their business compels them to a strict integrity, and they must be honest or cease to do business.

Another method of cultivating confidence in the individual breeder is found in securing as much publicity as possible. To secure such publicity the breeder must first of all be an advertiser—not a spasmodic, but an all-the-year-around advertiser. The public knows that the man whose advertisement appears in each issue of the Journal has confidence in the merits of his fowls and confidence in himself, and here, at least, the maxim, "Like produces like," is unqualifiedly true, for confidence begets confidence. The all-the-year-around advertiser is a known character; the public feels acquainted with him, and therefore it has in him the confidence which is born of acquaintanceship. Then, too, such publicity is gained by exhibiting his stock. If a man has confidence in the merits of his stock he will exhibit—at least so reasons the public. Some portion of the public will see the birds and know their value. This knowledge will spread and diffuse itself through other portions of the public by means of discussion, and especially through reports of the exhibition published in the poultry journals. And the same is true of the character of his stock sold. Buyers who have secured bargains and have been honorably treated, will tell others, and these still others. In these several ways the necessary publicity will be secured and the confidence in the individual breeder will be increased. As his reputation for producing good stock and dealing honorably, that is, as the desired and desirable publicity, extends, his trade will grow, slowly, perhaps, at first, but more and more rapidly as time passes. A great reputation as an honorable breeder cannot be acquired in a few months, but it can be acquired if the right methods are employed and sufficient time is allowed for its growth. And it is an encouraging thought that things which grow slowly usually last a long time. Mushrooms spring up in a night and almost as quickly pass away, while an oak tree adds something to its size and strength each year and continues for centuries. Better is it to have a lasting reputation, grown like an oak, than to have an ephemeral reputation of mushroom growth. And yet even slow growth may be somewhat hastened by the right cultivation, and there is no reason why the breeder should not, by legitimate means, hasten the growth of his reputation.

Intensive Poultry Keeping.

We hold no brief for, and we are not the paid advocate of, any special system of poultry keeping. We are interested in all systems, whether extensive or intensive. But there are certain considerations attaching to the intensive system which demand attention.

This system is not new. It was not only discovered many years ago but it has been in constant use ever since its discovery. Indeed, it is altogether probable that the intensive system is synchronous with the earliest attempt to domesticate the wild gallus, and, in one form or another, has been employed ever since that distant day. It will probably surprise some people to learn that they belong in the ranks of those engaged in keeping poultry under the intensive system. Everyone who keeps fowls confined in yards and houses, unless the yards are large enough to furnish practically free range is practicing this system. The only thing modern about it is its present extreme development and its general exploitation. In our day the yards have shrunk in size until, in some cases, they have wholly disappeared; the walls of the houses have kept closing in upon the fowls until the inclosed space seems totally inadequate to the needs of the fowls: and yet in these circumscribed quarters fowls are kept, eggs are laid, and chickens are reared.

The intensive system of poultry keeping makes its primary appeal to those who, for various reasons, have but a limited area of land which can be devoted to their fowls. There are thousands of such persons, dwellers in cities, towns and villages, to whom poultry keeping would be prohibited unless the intensive system were employed. Such persons, as a rule, do not make of poultry keeping a sole occupation but conduct it as a side issue, a supplement to their regular business. With such persons the question is not whether the extensive or the intensive system is the more profitable, but whether any system is available. And they have demonstrated that fowls can be kept successfully in narrow quarters, a fact which has resulted and will continue to result in an indefinitely increased number of poultry keepers and a greatly augmented value of poultry products.

Despite any and all objections which may be urged against the intensive system, it possesses certain advantages which appeal to every reasonable man. For example, under the intensive system—and we are speaking generally and not in respect to any particular development which the system may present—the fowls are more closely, thoroughly and constantly inspected than they would or could be under the extensive system. A constant study of the fowls at close range naturally and inevitably results in a better understanding of their needs, and such understanding leads to supplying whatever is needed.

Then, too, under the intensive system, the eggs laid by the hens are gathered promptly and while they are strictly fresh. None of them is lost. The whole product can be accounted for and safely guaranteed. Fowls upon a free range often lay in obscure and hidden places, and frequently their eggs are not discovered until they are more or less deteriorated, and sometimes they are not discovered at all. The loss of some, the deterioration of more, of the eggs, and the impossibility of guaranteeing their quality reduce the profit derivable from the feathered stock. And even in the chickens, as well as in the eggs, free range may be productive of more or less loss. Those reared "in the open" are liable to be caught by cats, eaten by rats, devoured by hawks, and destroyed in many other ways, while those reared under the intensive system are guarded against the attacks of such enemies, even if they have other disadvantages with which to contend.

Under any system of poultry keeping fowls are liable to be attacked by sickness. Sickness is something like a fire in this respect: the earlier you contend with it the better are your chances of overcoming it. But fowls on free range are often ailing long before their indisposition is noticed; when it is discovered, it may be too late—the sick fowl is moribund. But under the intensive system, because of the constant and close inspection, the first symptoms of indisposition are noticed, the proper remedies are administered, and the disease is eradicated before it has an opportunity to become firmly seated.

That there is a certain opposition between extensive and intensive poultry keeping is obvious; that there will be a conflict between the former and the modern extreme developments of the latter seems inevitable; but that this conflict will not be waged upon the impossibility of either form being conducted with some degree of success, but rather upon the relative profitableness of the opposing systems, seems probable. The outcome of that conflict we do not care to anticipate. However it may end, this may be confidently asserted, unless past experience is wholly misleading, that both systems will survive because both are needed. Upon farms, where land is abundant and where poultry is regarded as a minor incident to the general business, the extensive system will be likely to continue because it is an easy and convenient way of keeping fowls; where areas are limited the intensive system will, in some form, persist, because in no other way can the fowls be kept; where poultry keeping becomes an exclusive business the conflict will be fiercest and the one or the other will go to the wall, for the most profitable system only will be tolerated. Time will test the various modern developments of the intensive system and decide which, among its various forms, is best fitted to survive, and the survival of the fittest will, probably, in this, as in everything else, be determined with reference to the particular environment.

News Notes

WE CHANGE OUR STREET NUMBER BUT NOT THE LOCATION.

In accordance with the provisions of an ordinance passed by the Chicago City Council, a new system of street numbering has been adopted and all numbers have been changed. 355 Dearborn street which has been the address of Successful Poultry Journal heretofore has been changed to 535 South Dearborn St. The change as above stated is in the number only. The location is the same as formerly.

Through the efforts of the N. J. Branch of the A. P. A., the League of New Jersey Poultry Raisers, the Union County Poultry Association of Elizabeth, and a number of individual friends of the state poultry interests, the Legislature has passed a bill for the establishment of a New Jersey poultry experiment station. Ten thousand dollars has been appropriated for buildings suitable for the housing of the department, the stock and the equipment. Five thousand dollars has been appropriated for the purchase of stock and equipment and three thousand dollars will be provided annually for maintenance and operation.

A new book entitled Poultry for Profit, has been written and placed on the market by Lawrence Jackson, Box J, Haysville, Pa. It is profusely illustrated, contains 80 pages, 4½x6 inches in size and sells for 25 cents per copy. Mr. Jackson is a well known breeder of White Orpingtons, who has made a great success of his poultry business. The book is written from experience and contains a great deal of helpful information.

Poultry Pointers which has been published at Lamoni, Ia., is being moved to Kalamazoo, Mich., and the first issue from the new location will be June 1. E. R. Blett will continue as editor. The paper will be enlarged and improved in every way and the publishers intend to make it one of the leaders in the field. The business will be under the direct management of Mr. R. C. Saunders, who is one of Michigan's leading newspaper men and a thorough poultry fancier.

Poultrymen in Chicago and its many suburban towns will be interested in the announcement that a series of lectures will be held during the month of May at the Y. M. C. A., 19 South LaSalle St. They will be given by Prof. D. O. Barto of the Poultry Department of the Illinois State Agricultural College. The dates are May 2, 9, 16 and 23, at 8 p. m. The price of admission is 25 cents. The four topics are Breeding, Equipment, Hatching and Feeding.

The Wisconsin members of the American Poultry Association have formed a Wisconsin State Branch with the following temporary officers, President, H. W. Halbach, Waterford; vice-president, Jas. G. Halpin, Madison; second vice-president, F. A. Tecktonius, Racine; secretary-treasurer, F. C. Borchardt, Jr., Manitowoc. Nine prominent Wisconsin breeders constitute the executive board. All of the members that formerly composed the Mid-West Branch of the A. P. A. have now formed individual state branches and the Mid-West Branch is out of existence.

Mr. Irving A. Sibley, one of the members of the committee appointed by the American Poultry Association to investigate the abuses and rates of the express companies, writes us as follows: I wish to call attention of your readers to the fact of the desire of the American Poultry Association to take steps regarding the abuse or mistreatment they may have received at the hands of the express companies of the United States. In order to do this I wish that you would request your readers to advise me personally of cases where they feel they have been mistreated at the hands of the express companies, either in the matter of exorbitant prices or in regard to proper care not having been given to the goods, fowls, chicks or eggs consigned to them for transportation. We hope to correct any of these evils and we feel that, if the attention of the express companies is called to the existing conditions, there will be an effort made on their part to give better care and attention to our shipments." Mr. Sibley's address is Irving A. Sibley, Box B, 1032 Jefferson Blvd., South Bend, Ind.

ORPINGTONS
BUFF, BLACK AND PEARL WHITE

For the past six consecutive years I have shown and won the coveted prizes on Orpingtons at Chicago. During this period I won more premiums on Orpingtons at Chicago than any other three exhibitors combined. THERE'S A REASON. I am the oldest breeder of the three varieties of Orpingtons in the States. Twelve years of careful line breeding and study has developed the BYERS STRAIN, which is now a combination of the best possible utility and exhibition qualities such the public demands. This achievement together with my experience as Judge of Orpingtons at the largest shows enables me to know what constitutes a good Orpington and how to produce them. Some of the gratifying evidence follows: my late customers have won with my birds—FIRST at Omaha, Atlanta, Los Angeles, Portland, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Birmingham, Seattle, Kansas City, Dallas, Allentown, Cincinnati, Springfield, Memphis, Nashville, Detroit, and a hundred smaller shows and all bred from matings not so good as I have this season from which I OFFER AND WILL DELIVER MY BEST EGGS AT $15 PER 15. Eggs from my SECOND BEST MATINGS which are equal to those producing the winnings at above shows $10 per 15. Other select matings $5 per 15, $25 per 100. ALL UNFERTILE EGGS REPLACED FREE. Eggs half price after May 15th.

Incubators & Brooders

RAISING CHICKENS BY ARTIFICIAL METHODS.

The problem of raising chickens does not begin with the incubator or brooder. It begins with the parent stock. The breeding birds should be healthy, prolific and of good blood. The breeding pens should contain no birds which have ever had any disease, but they should be robust and hardy. In selecting breeding stock, great care should be given to the shape. If the birds are to be kept for eggs, the legs of the fowls should be well apart, the body long and wedge-shape, the eyes bright and the comb red. With birds like these as parent stock it is not hard to raise the little balls of life, although there are yet many corners to watch.

The next step is also important. It is the selection of eggs for hatching. These should not be too large or too small, but it is more important that they are not too small. No egg should be used that is round or in any way ill-shaped. They should be of uniformly good shape.

Before the hatching season, the incubators should be opened up and the removable parts, as well as the interior of the machine, thoroughly aired. The machine should then be put in working order and run empty for at least two days to make sure that the temperature can be regulated to a fraction of a degree.

After the eggs have been put into the machine, follow the directions of the maker. Most directions say to hold a temperature of about one hundred and two and a half degrees for the first part of the hatch, but to increase it to one hundred four or five while the eggs are hatching. Until the chicks begin to pip the shell the eggs should be turned twice each day and at the night turning should be cooled from five to fifteen minutes, depending upon the temperature of the room, which should never be below fifty degrees. Although some incubators have no moisture, it is a great help to put in a tin full of sand wet with water at the temperature of one hundred and five degrees. This is used only during the last few days and the object is to soften the shell and interior lining so that many strong chicks may be saved that would otherwise be lost.

Leave the chicks in the incubator for at least thirty-six hours after the last one has hatched. It is well to open the door slightly to admit fresh air for a few hours before the chickens are taken to the brooder, which should be well ventilated.

The temperature of the brooder should be one hundred degrees when the chicks are put into it, but the lamp flame must at once be reduced, because the heat of their bodies will raise the temperature ten or fifteen degrees. For the first ten days keep the heat at one hundred, but after that reduce it about five degrees each week. The ventilators should be kept open as much as possible without causing a draught, which is the worst thing for young chicks. The brooder must be cleaned every second day and refurnished with clean litter, clover heads being the very best material for this purpose.

For the first three days feed the chicks the infertile eggs which have been tested from the incubator. These should be boiled for half an hour and ground in a meat grinder, shells and all. Mix the eggs with five times the amount of rolled oats and add a very little salt. This food should be given them four times a day. They should be fed sparingly enough to keep them hungry for the next meal. After three days this feed can be given in the morning and at one o'clock, but prepared chick food should now be used at ten and four o'clock.

A WOMAN'S SUCCESSFUL POULTRY WORK.

To possess the ability to make what one has take the place of what one wants; to be able to so adjust and fit the wisdom of others, as found in papers or other places, so that it will be of value to one's own problem of the moment, is to spell profit instead of loss to many, many poultry keepers. Very forcibly is this fact illustrated by an instance which the writer discovered recently.

Way up in cold, snow-bound Maine is a woman who woke up one January morning and found a big problem facing her. Having an income of only $1.00 per day, from which $10.00 in cash per month must be taken for mortgage and interest, she found this small remaining sum was all there was to feed a family of six. Living on a farm there were potatoes and beans on hand, but that was all. There were fifty hens which had been only half fed so far during the winter. She knew those hens simply must be induced to lay. As the cash was so limited the feeding had to be studied carefully, and everything else.

Mrs. Jones lost no time in getting to work with those hens. Several of them had frost-bitten combs. Instead of fussing because there was no muslin for curtains or boards for droppings, she got dry goods boxes, ripped them apart and made platforms from those. Then feed bags of burlap were sewed together and tacked into place before the roosts. These curtains come a bit below the platforms and kept the birds warm enough at night so that no more trouble was had by the hens being cold at night. Mrs. Jones firmly believes in plenty of fresh air, so next she took the upper half of the windows out and nailed poultry netting on the outside to keep the hens in. At night the windows were put back and nails slipped into holes made for them. Feed boxes and water dishes were found so near the floor that they were soon fouled with litter and filth. These were nailed up high enough to keep dirt from being scratched into them and yet be within reach of the hens.

For feed a dry mash was made of one part meal and three parts mixed feed, with one part ground meat and bone. These ingredients were not just what Mrs. Jones would have selected if she had not been compelled to count the cost quite so hard, but this mash produced the results just the same. It was kept before the hens all the time. At night, when the water dishes were emptied and curtains put down, a half pint of wheat for each ten hens was scattered in each pen. At early daylight fresh, warm water was supplied. If the hens were not busy enough to suit her, a bit more of wheat was given in the litter at noon, and more clean, warm water. Mrs. Jones pins a great deal of faith to plenty of clean water. Her hens are never allowed to go without water for even ten minutes, and she finds it pays. At night a quart of corn to every ten hens was given. About every other day they got a good feed of fresh meat, cut up fine. In just one week the first eggs were received and today (March 1) those biddies are paying their own way, and buying many of the groceries.

At odd moments Mrs. Jones is preparing to care for the five hundred chickens which she hopes to raise this summer. Dry goods boxes are playing an important part in this work. Feed boxes, coops, runs, partitions and fireless brooders are being made from these inexpensive but efficient boxes. Mrs. Jones has promised to tell us how she comes out with the fireless brooders.

TO buy a roofing that requires painting is inviting trouble.

Painted roofings are as out of date as the harvester machinery of thirty years ago.

The roofing of to-day needs no painting. That's one of its great features.

If you are still using the "old rubber kind," the kind that requires painting every year or two to keep it tight, we want to tell you about Amatite; why it needs no painting; why it wears longer than the "smooth surfaced" roofings, and why it costs less.

We want to send you a sample so that you can see what a solid, substantial waterproof roofing Amatite really is. Write to-day. Address nearest office.

Prevention and Cure of Disease

A FEW OF THE MORE COMMON DISEASES.

A much larger number of inquiries than usual have been received recently in regard to various diseases and a few of them are described this month in this department. Many of our readers would be able to prevent diseases and cure many cases in their first stages if they would preserve their copies of S. P. J. each month and refer to them when trouble arises. Much time is lost in correspondence and oftentimes we cannot cover matters thoroughly in a letter, because the subjects really require lengthy articles to explain in detail the diseases, the causes, the symptoms and the cures.

Bronchitis.

Bronchitis is a disease affecting the bronchial tubes of the fowls: small chicks as well as mature birds are subject to it. The disease is usually caused by continued damp or foul surroundings, or by an irritating dust, such as air-slaked lime. The symptoms are occasional gaping, somewhat as in gapes, with a slight rattling sound in the throat and is at times accompanied by difficult breathing. Upon opening an affected specimen the throat, or bronchial tubes, will appear inflamed. Treatment for a grown fowl is ten drops of spirits of turpentine in one teaspoonful of castor oil administered every five hours until relieved. Should purging result discontinue the oil. In cases of difficult breathing give three drops of syrup of ipecac. Give proportionate doses to chicks according to their age and size.

Rheumatism.

Rheumatism is indicated by swelling of the limbs and joints, a jerky walk and frequent squatting of the fowl; sores or ulcers may also appear on the limbs. The disease affects old fowls more often than young ones. The cause is exposure to a damp, chilling atmosphere, often augmented by filthy surroundings. Give twenty grains Epsom salts, followed next day by thirty grains bicarbonate of soda in each quart of drinking water, also give twice daily two grains salicylic acid. Bathe the affected parts with carbolated vaseline, or camphorated sweet oil.

Scaly Legs.

Scaly Leg is caused by a minute parasite which furrows under the scales of the legs and causes a rough, unsightly appearance. Apply kerosene and lard mixed, half and half, and rub well into the rough places, or use carbolated vaseline in the same manner. The treatment is more effective if the legs of the affected fowls are soaked in warm water before applying the mixture. Another remedy is to place a pan containing kerosene and water where the fowls will be compelled to step into it in passing in and out of the house. A slight film of kerosene over the water is sufficient.

Limberneck.

This disease affects the legs and neck of the fowls, rendering them helpless, as though paralyzed. It is caused by eating decaying vegetable and animal food and the symptoms are much the same as ptomaine poisoning in human beings; in many respects the disease appears to be identical with it. ACCURACY out the digestive tract by administering Epsom salts or castor oil. A five-pound pullet will require a half-teaspoonful of the salt dissolved in six of water. Give castor oil in teaspoonful doses every three hours until a full and free movement of the bowels is obtained. Then add five grains of sulpho-carbolate of zinc to four ounces of water and place before the fowl to drink, keeping away all other water. Continue this for three days. A number of fowls can be treated together in the same pen by using more of the zinc solution. Keep all decaying animal and vegetable matter entirely away from the fowls.

Soft Shelled Eggs.

Are usually the result of an over-fat condition of the layers. A lack of lime in the feed, forced feeding for eggs, or a combination of these causes may promote the trouble. Remove the cause and the difficulty will soon disappear. If possible, separate the fowls laying soft shelled eggs from the remainder of the flock, as they are liable to cause the flock to contract the egg-eating habit.

Douglass' Mixture.

This is a preparation that has been used for a good many years in the prevention and cure of bowel troubles in poultry. It is prepared as follows: Four ounces sulphate of iron (copperas), one ounce of sulphuric acid, one gallon of water; mix well and put in stone jar or jug; never use metal receptacle. A tablespoon and one-half to two tablespoonfuls of the mixture to a gallon of drinking water is the proper proportion for adult fowls.

Gapes.

The best thing to do in combatting this trouble is to adopt preventive measures, by confining all the affected chicks where they cannot mingle with the remainder of the flock. This disease is scattered by the fowls coming in contact with the worms that have been coughed up by the afflicted chicks and that have found lodgment in feeding and drinking vessels or on the ground itself. The primary cause is often the eating of angle works, although in some localities these worms do not affect the chicks. The runs and houses in which the chicks have been confined should be well cleaned and disinfected with a 5 per cent solution of carbolic acid. For treatment of the afflicted birds take a feather, strip off the web to within an inch of the end, and moisten it well with oil of turpentine. Hold the chick firmly in the hand, force the mouth open and when the windpipe is open for breathing insert the feather, giving it a quick turn and removing it promptly. Two or three applications of this will bring the chicks around all right. A good internal treatment is two or three feeds of garlic mixed with soft feed in a proportion of one good-sized bulb of garlic to about ten chicks. Camphor in the form of pills is also a good remedy, a dose being one-half to one grain twice a day.

Chicken Pox or Sore Head.

Chicken pox, sometimes called "sore head," becomes manifest in the form of scabby excrescences on the comb, lobes, face and the unfeathered portions of the head. The sores are wart-like in appearance and may become so numerous and serious as to result in death. The disease is contagious and afflicted birds should be immediately separated from the flock and treated. The trouble generally makes its appearance in wet weather during the summer. Damp, filthy poultry houses increase the tendency toward the disease, and in any event is favorable to its development. The prime cause of it is often mosquito or flea bites upon a fowl whose system is not able to throw off the poison. Anoint the affected parts frequently with carbolated vaseline, removing the crusts as they soften and yield to gentle rubbing.

Department of Practical Poultry Feeding

BEANS ARE GOOD CHICKEN FEED.

In all my reading of poultry literature I have never found beans recommended as feed for hens. Of course hens will not eat raw, ripe white beans. If one does, it is an exception—a phenomenon. In time of drought when grass is dry and parched, hens will pick open the green pods and eat the green beans if they can get to them.

Neither are hens exceedingly fond of cooked beans, yet when mixed with ground grain and fed as a mash they eat them readily.

If the reader has ever thought of the matter he or she will have discovered that the housewife seldom or never serves both eggs and beans at the same meal, nor does the ordinary individual care for these two kinds of food at the same time. Therefore aside from any scientific knowledge of constituent food elements we conclude that beans are a feed adapted to egg production.

Then again, except for fattening, hens do not require a concentrated grain diet, like corn, wheat, buckwheat and millet. So we mix such grains with oats and barley to help fill the hens without overfeeding. Beans when cooked are two or three times their original bulk, therefore desirable in this respect. A bushel of beans will last a small flock a long time.

Now we do not recommend buying beans at $2 a bushel or upward for hen feed. Michigan is one of the few great bean-raising states and cull beans are quite common. At many railroad stations, villages and cities are located bean-picking establishments where the beans are hand-picked for market. The cull beans, consisting of splits, unripe, discolored or partly decayed and then dried beans, along with some gravel and lumps of clay, are bought by farmers for feed for sheep or hogs. To the former they are fed raw; for the latter they are cooked. The usual price is about $1 per cwt.—a cent a pound.

Time and fuel are important factors when considering cooked feed or raw grains. Where the housewife can put a kettle of cull beans on the kitchen stove and cook them without keeping up a fire for the beans alone there is no additional expense and such feed is cheap. Or, where the farmer has an outdoor feed cooker and cooks feed every day for hogs, it is a small chore to dish out a few of the beans for the hens. Three or four times a week is often enough to feed beans to hens. And, by the way, it improves the feed to put the potato, apple and vegetable parings in with the beans to cook; and do not forget to salt them just about as you would beans for human consumption.

Here is another thing worth remembering. Sometimes as much as three-fourths or more of such cull beans are only discolored from contact with the pods when rained upon in the field after being pulled. When parboiled such beans are as white and clean and as fit to eat as any you get at the grocery. Buy them by the half-bushel or more, pick out the few stones and really bad ones at your convenience and save paying eight or ten cents a quart for beans for your table.

squeezed dry with the hand. I mix fine grit with this, and feed this mixture for several days, after which I bake corn bread or johnny-cake, which is simply corn meal mixed with either sweet milk or water and a very little salt, and thoroughly baked. This is moistened with milk and mixed with grit and charcoal and given for several days.

After the young turkeys are sixteen to twenty days old I begin to feed cracked wheat and oat grouts, but still continue the baked corn meal, alternating the two. Grit is a very important factor for the poults and I mix it in every feed, whether moistened or dry, and charcoal is given two or three times a week. When the young poults begin to get their long wing flight feathers, they require extra care and attention. These feathers seem to grow so rapidly sometimes as to sap their vitality, and when they begin to walk around with their wings drooping, I pull these flight feathers out. By the time they start again, the young birds are much further advanced, and it does not seem to affect them.

By this time the poults are six weeks old, and weigh a pound and a half or two pounds. At this time they are fed more liberally on grain, and I also find it a very good plan to keep cottage or pot cheese in which is put onion tops, chopped fine, before them and I find that this makes a good feed. After they shoot the red, at which time most of our troubles are over, I place where they can get it whenever they want it, clabbered milk, which is an excellent feed at this time, and they will eat a great deal of it. Then, too, knowing that it is always waiting for them, they will return from time to time during the day from their foraging to eat it, and thus they form the habit of coming home at stated periods.

From this time on they are practically given their liberty to roam over field and wood, receiving a light feed of grain at night just before they are shut up. This induces them to return without trouble. From all this it will be seen that the first four weeks of a turkey's life is the most critical one. A baby is less care, I have often thought, during this time, than a lot of young turkeys, but when in the fall they flock around for their daily ration, plump and fat, with plumage a wave of iridescence and sheen, which no artist could place upon canvas, and you know that each one represents two or more big round dollars on the market, one feels amply repaid for all care, vigilance and attention bestowed upon them in their infancy.

Feed for Ducklings.

A good feed for ducklings is a mash composed of two-thirds wheat bran and one-third corn meal wet with whole or skimmed milk to a crumbly state. Keep it before them all of the time for the first three days, then feed every three hours until 7 to 8 days old; after that four times feeding daily will be sufficient. Keep plenty of fresh water and fine grit before them all the time. Any of the prepared dry chick foods put up by reliable houses give the very best of results and often prove more successful and economical than those that are prepared at home.

Feeding Sloppy Food.

Wet, sloppy food can be fed to chicks and grown fowls with excellent results but the dangers from it are so much greater than with dry feeding that it is not advisable to feed the food in this condition. Dry feeding takes less time, the feed costs no more, and all things considered, far surpasses the other method in every way, especially for chicks until after they have passed the danger point of three to six weeks of age.

THE POULTRY BUSINESS AS I SEE IT.

We hear it frequently said that this is an age of trickery—an age of deception—an age in which the successful man is the "smart" man. That is untrue. It is false and misleading. No real, genuine success can be achieved unless it is based upon honesty and integrity, and the world has never known so high a standard of honesty and integrity as it knows today.

A few years ago a fancy poultry breeder was rather a suspicious character. People who answered our ads would never order stock until after a lengthy correspondence; however, today the people put so much faith in the various breeders that they send send their order a great many times direct from the ad, and we want to say right here that it is a very good practice, as no breeder who expects to remain in business would give such a customer anything but a square deal.

Poultry papers are so careful today that it is very seldom that a fraud is admitted to their columns and he does not last long when he does get in.

Breeders are handling their business in a more business-like manner. They are all too busy to throw rocks at their brother breeders. The breeder who throws mud at his competitors is a bad marksman, for he hits himself.

The products of American breeders are known all over the world. They would not be as well known as they are, were it not for the advertising they get. American poultry breeders are the greatest advertisers in the world.

Your success in the poultry business depends on two things: The best stock your money will buy and proper management in marketing your stock or judicious advertising.

When you start in the poultry business get the best stock you can find. Then build up a strain of your own from this foundation. Don't advertise some other fellow's strain for him. Remember he who sells that which is best of its kind gets his best advertisement in that which he sells.

Mix a little horse sense with your advertising cents and your poultry advertising will pay out.

ABOUT BLACK COLUMBIAN WYANDOTTE CHICKS.

Nearly every day I get letters from beginners asking why their chicks have so much black in their plumage. Some are black and some are pure white and some show a lighter black than others.

The Standard says the undercolor should be white, bluish white or slate. You will see by referring to the Standard that it specifies for wings—Wing bows, white, except fronts which may be partly black. Primaries, black, with white edging on lower web. Secondaries, lower portion of lower web white, etc. Now in order to obtain this Standard wing it is necessary to have this color, and those chicks which come black will in many cases be the best birds when matured. The black which shows so prominent when small is the undercolor when the chicks are matured. When they get their last plumage this color is underneath and the surface color is made a purer and more beautiful white for having the undercolor dark.

The amateur breeder thinks that when the chicks show black and white all mixed that this is the way they will look when matured. No attention should be paid to color at this stage of their growth. Wasn't John a homely fellow when he was small; freckled, red headed, awkward, and slim? And Mary—how she looked! And as we watched these children grow was it not encouraging to see all these awkward and homely features disappearing as they grew older?

COLUMBIAN WYANDOTTE WINNERS.

The above birds are some of the winners at the Indianapolis show. They were bred and are owned by H. G. Schoening, 829 Steele Ave., Dayton, O.

Freckled face John grew into a fine looking man. Big, strong, robust fellow. And Mary, that little homely slip of a girl, now a beautiful lady. This may be a very amusing illustration, but it has its application. I have seen the homeliest and scrubbiest looking Columbian Wyandotte chicks mature into beautiful birds. Nature works wonders in the fowl kingdom just as it does in the human family. Don't get discouraged or think you haven't any good birds because they don't show Standard markings as chicks. Watch them and note the change and this will make you an ardent lover of them all the more. We all like to see things change, especially when it is for the better. If it was not for the Standard calling for the black wings, tails and necks we could have all of our chicks pure white. But don't let the color worry you. That is one of the main points but it is not the only point. If all your chicks don't grow into winners they will fill the egg basket, and if they will lay more eggs for you than any chicken you ever had, you will forget about the color.

But those black chicks of yours today may in six months from now be crowing or cackling in some show room with a nice blue ribbon on the coop, a smile on your face and a determination to have more next year.

POULTRY ON THE FARM.

Volumes have been written on this subject and no doubt much good has been accomplished, but I hope my farmer friends will pardon me when I say that poultry on the average farm is still in a deplorable condition.

Why is it that the farmer does not give his poultry the same care and attention that he gives to his other live stock? The oft used expression that chickens do not pay is nearly always the answer. This old notion has been exploded long ago. Chickens when hatched right, fed right, raised right, and housed right, do pay and they pay handsomely. When poultry is kept under the above conditions they bring in a bigger profit according to the money invested than any other live stock on the farm. Almost every farmer raises more or less chickens, but with the majority it is a hit or miss way. Most of them depend on the hen to do the hatching and rearing, paying very little attention to see that the chicks get the right start in life.

The farmer is surely missing a golden opportunity to add to his bank account by neglecting his poultry.

Occasionally we come across a farmer who takes pride in his flock of chickens, housing them and caring for them as he does his other stock. He will tell you that his poultry is paying him a nice profit. He does not only think they do; he is sure of it because he keeps an account; runs it same as he would any other business. Then you meet the other fellow; he will tell you chickens are a nuisance, do not pay for the feed they consume, and he is giving you facts so far as he is concerned. To this man let me say, sell your mongrels, every one of them, invest some money for pure bred stock and after you get it keep it pure. If you do not care or cannot invest a large amount buy a breeding pen as a starter; do not be afraid to pay a little something. Pure bred stock is worth money, and they are by far the cheapest in the end. Tear down that old lousy chicken house and build a new one. It need not be an expensive one, as long as it is tight and dry. Have plenty of ventilation. During the winter months feed the fowls oats, wheat, cracked corn, animal matter and green stuff. Have fresh water, grit and cracked oyster shells before them at all times. Keep them working and hustling; hatch as many chicks during April and May as you can raise properly. If you do your hatching with hens give them a good dusting with lice powder before setting and every week during incubation. After chicks are hatched place them with the hen in a dry tight coop; feed sparingly at first. When about a week old give the hen another good dusting with lice powder. Continue to do this until the chicks can shift for themselves.

It is my firm belief that lice kill more little chicks than any disease. With a little care and attention chicks

SOME VERY INTERESTING BITS OF EXPERIENCE.

Until this season I have always turned eggs for setting every day, and, as I have to do this by hand, it involved considerable care and work. It seemed to me that this might be a useless care, so I saved eggs for a little over two weeks without turning them once, and brought off an excellent hatch—just as large as the one which came out of the same machine this time last year. So I am not going to bother turning eggs after this.

My friend and neighbor used one of my machines last summer and he wet the eggs daily by sprinkling, securing a 98 per cent hatch. I notice the eggs did not shrink in size, as they do when we use no moisture, and I am sure eggs set under a hen do not shrink to any noticeable extent.

I set 60 eggs, 30 of which had been collected carefully to avoid any chill and 30 others collected twice daily and kept in a little cupboard where it was cold at night. When testing them in the machine I took out 19 of the latter as not hatching and but one of the former. The eggs were from the same pen, but different nests.

I have been breeding single-comb Reds for six years, and I note that a red-eyed male will fill a pen with red eyes in one season and likewise a male with a poor eye will transfer it to his progeny generally in one season. The male influences color of plumage strongly, but not nearly so rapidly as the eye. An excellent comb on a breeding male does not seem to carry readily to the offspring, as I used a bird with the finest kind of a five-point, properly sized comb for two years, only to note no change in comb to mention.

There is no use breeding from under-sized females, no matter how good they are in markings, shape and color. You will secure small chickens; at least I did, and so I avoid this kind of females. I have never been able to see that it affected the size or vigor of my birds to inbreed closely for several years consecutively, daughters to sires, and vice versa, and even half-brothers and half-sisters. Good-sized, mature pullets will breed good-sized young without a doubt.

I have noticed types of birds carrying over in the young, year after year, when that type was no longer in the breeding pen. I have not the least doubt that a utility red hatched from a prize pen will throw some chicks resembling her high scoring parents. Some faults are hard to breed out, among them being no ticking in the male hackle and high tails. They are both very persistent. A tendency to white ear lobes left my flock after two years of careful selection of breeders. A mating of a dark red cockerel to rather light red females threw a few richly colored birds and a great many chocolate birds.

I find an open-front house and large oiled muslin windows will freeze single combs on coldest days and nights; so I have little ventilation on those few days each winter.

Sixty birds can be kept in a house, 8x25, all winter without a single case of sickness if they are kept fairly clean, dry and given exercise in straw litter. I presume there are other things which maintained the health of these birds, but the point I make is that I can keep large numbers in small places without disease.

It costs me about $1.30 a year to feed hens, and I buy by retail a bag or two at a time. I raised 50 broilers till the average weight was two lbs. for 16 cents each for feed. I kept them in my back yard and counted every item of expense for their feed.

Questions Answered

In this department each month questions will be answered that are asked by readers. When writing for information please give all details in full or an an intelligent answer cannot always be given. No portion of your letter will be published if the mere statement of the question will answer the purpose. As there are oftentimes good reasons why inquirers do not wish their identity known, we will not publish names, initials or location. Questions are answered by experts in the various branches of poultry raising. Adress all inquiries to Successful Poultry Journal, 355 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Question.—I would kindly ask if you would give me as much information as possible on the following subject in the next edition of your journal: The theory has been advanced that it is impossible to get thoroughbred fowls from pullets that have been crossed from the time that they came to maturity. I have a pen of thoroughbreds hatched in August and have allowed a Black Minorca cockerel, about three months older to run with them until now. About half or more are laying now. Can you say positively whether I can get chickens from these hens that will not have Minorca blood in them? I do not wish to raise chicks from this stock and then find I have nothing but a bunch of mixed breeds. If it is possible to get thoroughbreds from this stock, how soon would advise me to begin using the eggs for hatching purposes.

Answer.—There is considerable chance of getting a number of birds that are not pure bred from the hens you refer to, but this chance would be exceedingly small if another male bird is mated to the hens and the eggs from each hen are not set until after at least four or five have been laid and discarded. The idea is that in the case of each individual hen the second mating would overcome the effects of the first mating after she had laid five or six eggs.

Question.—I am marking my eggs with a rubber stamp used on an ordinary red ink pad and I am in doubt whether this will injure the hatching qualities of the eggs. Can you inform me regarding the matter?

Answer.—There is not one chance out of fifty that stamping the eggs would injure them, but we would not take the chance if we were you. Anything that closes the pores of the shell is detrimental and there may be something in the rubber stamp ink which would affect the eggs. There is not enough danger to justify us in saying absolutely that you should not do it, but we will say that it would be more advisable for you to mark the eggs with a lead pencil.

Question.—I have a fine Brown Leghorn cockerel one year old naturally very spry and active. He had what I call scaley feet and legs up to the knees. I bathed them every day in carbon oil until they dried up nicely and he still stands around on one foot and starts off lame. (Has no bumble foot.) What do you think wrong and what could I do for him? Sometimes on one foot and then on the other.

Answer.—Your treatment of the legs and feet may have produced inflamation and soreness. A close examination of the bird ought to reveal the trouble unless it is something of an internal nature. Some forms of liver disease cause lameness. Examine the legs and thighs carefully for inflammation or swelling. The trouble may be of a rheumatic nature, in which case bathe the legs with any good liniment. If they are inflamed apply vaseline frequently.

Question.—I sat a hen in a cement cellar thinking it would be warmer than outside. When her three weeks were up there were no eggs pipped nor chicks out. Three days after, I opened several of the eggs and found lively chicks with the yolks not yet absorbed. The hen accidentally broke one egg that had been sat upon two weeks and there was a chick inside about the same size as those found at three weeks. My hen was not at fault. She was an ideal setter. The eggs are from four pullets and a cockerel about ten months old. They are Partridge Wyandottes. The pullets weigh from 5½ to 6 lbs. each. The cockerel 7 lbs. They seem to be in the best of condition. Is it possible that egg shells get too hard for the chicks to pick their way out? What causes hard shell?

Answer.—Unusual hardness of shell might be responsible for trouble of this kind in an occasional egg but not with the entire lot of any one setting. Abnormally thick shelled eggs are laid occasionally when the egg is not expelled at the proper time. In your case there is only one plausible reason for the trouble and that is that the hen did not sit steadily or that she sat in a place where the outside temperature was too cold for her to supply the necessary heat. You cannot be sure that the hen sat steadily unless you observed her two or three times a day. Your breeding birds may also be at fault. A mating of pullets and cockerel ten months of age is not a desirable one although many times it will produce satisfactory results.

Question.—Some of my hens are constantly stretching their necks as if they were trying to swallow, and another thing—in their crops there seems to be a hard mass of some kind. Have tried to dissolve this hard matter by giving castor oil and a little salt and then gently squeezing same, trying to work it loose, but all in vain. They seem to be perfectly well otherwise.

I feed my hens corn, oats, wheat and also a mash consisting of bread, meat scraps, potatoes, bran, etc., and cabbage as green food. Have grit, charcoal and oyster shells before them at all times. Feed grain in litter of straw. Now what would you think the cause of this would be? and also please advise me how I could overcome the trouble.

Answer.—Judging from your letter we can only suggest that perhaps your birds are affected with "crop bound." You do not describe any symptoms that would indicate any other trouble. We do not know what the general surroundings are in which the birds are kept and we therefore cannot make any definite suggestion as to what could cause the trouble. The birds may be eating large quantities of straw or dead grass, both of which sometimes causes it. Overfeeding of oats will also cause it. Mild cases of "crop bound" can be cured by giving a tablespoonful of sweet oil and one or two tablespoonfuls of quite warm water, after which knead the crop gently and force the contents out of the mouth, holding the bird head downward. If the crop is hard and much distended and the above treatment fails to give relief, an operation is necessary to remove the obstruction. Make an incision in the outer skin with a very sharp knife. It should be near the top and should be up and down, not more than two inches in length. Force the crop to one side before making an incision in it, so that when the wounds are sewed up the one in the crop proper will not be opposite the one in the outer skin, but will be entirely covered by the skin. After making the second incision remove the contents of the crop, after which cleanse it thoroughly with warm water in which has been placed a small quantity of any good antiseptic solution—four drops of carbolic acid to an ounce of water will answer the purpose. Stitch the cuts with silk thread, being particular not to fasten the crop to the outer skin. The wounds should heal in five or six days. Give no food at all for about twelve hours, and then begin feeding by giving milk for a day in small quantities at a time, then allowing soft foods, principally mashes, and in four or five days whole grain and the regular diet may be given.

S. C. BLACK MINORCA HEN.

Winner of second prize at Philadelphia. Bred and owned by C. H. Staunton, 406 Flower City Park, Rochester, N. Y., who is a veteran breeder of high grade Minorcas.

Question.—Are oats in any way harmful to a fowl?

Answer.—Ordinarily they are not. In rare cases, overfeeding of oats alone or an exclusive diet of them will cause crop bound. No trouble will be experienced if they are fed with other grain. When fed alone it is desirable to soak them in warm water until the sharp points are softened. Clipped oats can be purchased from all dealers in feed and poultry supplies. Whole oats should not be fed to small chicks.

Question.—About a month and a half ago I purchased a cockerel. For about a week I noticed that he developed a small white spot on the face near the eye and a few days ago another one appeared just above the eye (both on the left side of the face. His comb and wattles were bluish with a slight white tint on same. I paid no attention to this until I had noticed the symptoms for about four days, when I talked to a friend who said that the bird evidently had chicken pox. Upon his advice I immediately applied spirits of nitre locally on the spots affected and gave some of it diluted in about twice the quantity of water, also gave him a liver pill. The next morning he looked better, the comb appeared redder, the whiteness disappeared and the blue had somewhat left the comb and wattles and the spots on the face had almost disappeared.

The next night I again applied locally spirits of nitre and gave internally some diluted nitre and a dose of castor oil. The next morning he seemed greatly improved and the spots on the face seemed dried and came to a point like a dried blister.

I examined him today but could find no indications of discolored spots on the skin of the body. I also noticed that comb is slightly yellow near where the points start from comb. The points themselves are bluish, though considerably improved. The white spots have disappeared.

Are the symptoms those of chicken pox and was my treatment correct? If not, what was it and what treatment should have been given?

I was further advised that this is a disease which is carried in the blood and may be transmitted from the parent stock to the chicks. Is this a fact?

The houses seem fairly dry, though it has rained considerably lately and has, of course, been damp. Might this have caused the disease?

After reading this description, do you think that the breeder who sold me the cockerel is dishonest and has some time or another had this disease in his flock? I do not know of any other chickens in the neighborhood affected. Have not noticed that the hens are affected.

Will it be safe to incubate eggs from this mating (if disease is chicken pox), and also if fresh eggs laid by these hens would be dangerous to eat?

The cockerel has appeared lively and active all along and even crows during confinement. How long after removing him from the breeding coop would eggs be fit for hatching?

Answer.—The trouble was no doubt chicken pox. Your treatment was evidently efficient because it produced results, but you should have confined your use of the nitre to external applications. It could not possibly be of value administered internally. The liver pill was of value. Anything in the nature of a tonic and blood purifier is useful in cases of this kind. A simple and effective remedy for chicken pox is common carbolated vaseline applied as frequently as possible, at least once a day. The disease is not hereditary and will not be transmitted to the progeny. Dampness and filth will cause chicken pox and especially if a bird is in a debilitated condition. The breeder from whom you purchased the bird is not necessarily dishonest and he may never have had the disease in his flock although it is not uncommon. Eggs from the hens are perfectly safe to eat and for incubation even though they themselves were affected.

Question.—I have made me a brooder out of pine lumber and painted it with some green paint that I happened to have and also put a good deal of turpentine in it so it would soon dry, but to my surprise the thing still smelled so loud that I am afraid to put the chicks in it. Please tell me what to do with it, or do you think it will hurt the chicks? It is perfectly dry and has been painted several days.

Answer.—If you will set the brooder out in the open air, the odor from the fresh paint should disappear in a couple of days. It would not be injurious to the chicks unless it was very strong. Perhaps one of your town painters could give you a pointer regarding the matter if you would make inquiry of him. Try scrubbing it thoroughly with strong soap.

Question.—I sent to England this winter and purchased a heavy trio of Indians but lost one hen enroute and the cock has been very sick, just beginning to pick up now. He weighed ten lbs. when he came and the hen 8 lbs. I would like to ask your advice in regard to mating this English hen with a male of mine weighing 8½ lbs. I have three hens all weighing 7 lbs. or over that I wanted to mate with this imported cock, but since I have noticed that he does not seem to attend the hens well I am afraid to trust him. He doesn't seem to be as full of life as he should. He does a lot of prancing around the hens but very seldom serves one of them, so I have been thinking of putting him to himself and giving these four large hens to another good vigorous cock. Is there anything that can be given him that will remedy the trouble.

Answer.—The only way to find out definitely his value as a breeder is to give him a thorough trial. If you place him with the hens and he does not mate with them, we would suggest that you take him out of the pen for about two days at a time. Give him a coop or a run so located that he can see the females, but not get to them. Feed him liberally with nourishing food and include a little raw meat, then put him back into the pen with the females for a day or two and he will probably be all right.

Question.—Please let me know how to treat eggs in order to prevent them from hatching. Some people buy eggs stating that they wish them for table use when in reality they want them for hatching and do not wish to pay the regular price.

Answer.—Dip the eggs in boiling water two or three seconds. Prick the small end deeply with a fine needle. Sometimes shaking the egg vigorously a half-dozen times will answer.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full.

Farmers are conservative and reluctant to experiment with novelties until they have thoroughly investigated them. Some farmers are still sticking to the old-fashioned smooth-coated roofings which require regular painting simply because they don't know very much about the new mineral-surfaced type. Probably they do not realize how easy it is to find out all about the new kind of roofing that needs no painting. All that is necessary to do is to write to the manufacturers of Amatite Roofing, asking for a free sample. It will be sent by return mail and involves no obligation whatever on the part of the inquirer.

A HELPFUL BOOK ON POULTRY FREE

Not very long ago, a well-known poultry writer, being asked what breed a beginner should start with, answered, "Any pure breed." In these days when so many breeders are specializing not only along one breed, but one variety of that breed, it is not easy for the new recruit to get general and reliable information about the various breeds. Yet that is exactly what he can get if he sends to Mr. B. H. Greider, Rheems, Pa., Box 101, a subscriber of this paper, for his new 1911 poultry book. It shows over 60 varieties of poultry—standard breeds; as well as bantams—game fowl, ducks, geese and turkeys. Many of the illustrations are in color. The book also gives practical helps about poultry houses and the care of poultry to keep them free from disease and vermin.

REMEDY FOR GARGET.

Definition:—An inflammation of the udder caused almost always by the presence of unhealthy germs.

Symptoms:—Swelling of the udder, diminished secretion of milk which is often curdled and bad smelling. Pain, which varies in amount, and often lameness caused by the rubbing of the thighs against the inflamed glands. Milking is difficult or impossible.

Results:—If not properly and promptly treated the affected quarters lost their usefulness and the cow goes to the butcher.

Several years ago G. P. Pilling & Son Co., Philadelphia, Pa., devised a special outfit for the treatment of garget. After making many experiments this firm hit upon the combinations they sell known as "Pilling Garget Remedy." That it has been most successful is evidenced by the many reports received of its value. It has now stood the test of several years' use. This garget outfit is as near perfection as anything can be. When you have used it you will back up those statements.

OCULUM, A WONDERFUL REMEDY.

While attending the Boston show, we overheard Mr. C. H. Latham discussing the merits of Oculum. He was explaining to a friend what it was and what it would do for a sick chicken; from what Mr. Latham said, it is the greatest "boon to poultrymen" ever discovered. To be brief, we will say that Oculum is a serum that is administered by way of injection into the rectum, hence it is easy to use and there is no chance connected with its use, as there is with a good many treatments and remedies for poultry. The inventor of this great discovery was one of the largest breeders in the country, every year he would lose hundreds of chicks by White Diarrhœa,, Cholera and Gapes. In the perfection and use of Oculum these dread diseases no longer have any terror, as it is a preventive as well as a cure. When the chicks are taken from the incubator a mild injection of Oculum renders them immune from White Diarrhea. While for colds or even Roup in its first stages it has never failed to cure. When such men as U. R. Fishel, A. C. Hawkins, C. H. Latham and A. C. Smith, superintendent of Grove Hill Poultry Yards, have told you that they have used Oculum, and found that it did everything that was claimed for it, no breeder, no matter how small, can afford to be without it. They are men that can be relied upon to tell you the exact truth, and from our knowledge of the success of this great discovery, we are fully convinced that Oculum will be to poultry what vaccine virus has been to the human race. Now is the best time in the world to try it. The little chicks are coming out of their shells by the thousands and tens of thousands. It's easy to hatch them, but it's another thing to raise them; you can raise every chick hatched, that is fit to raise, by the use of Oculum either as a preventive or a remedy. ANNOUNCEMENTS of POULTRY SHOWS SPECIALTY CLUBS

TO BREEDERS OF BUFF WYANDOTTES.

The American Buff Wyandotte Club wishes to announce that it has just issued its 1911 Catalog or Year Book and that it is the finest catalog ever issued by a specialty club. These books cost the club twenty cents each to print and mail but will be sent to every one who will send ten cents in silver or stamps. This book is worth $1 to every one who is interested in Buff Wyandottes. Be sure to send for it.

We also want you to join the club and help us push the Buffs to the front, and in order to induce you to join at this time we will give you a fully paid up membership from now to October 1, 1912 for $1. We hope that many live Buff Wyandotte breeders will take advantage of this offer and join the club, for the good of the breed and the business. The club is doing good work for the breed but we think we do not get proper support from the breeders. We need you, and you need us, so why not get into the club now while you have a good chance to do so?

The Officers of the Club invite every Buff Wyandotte breeder in the land to send in his name for the Catalog and for all other matters that are for the good of the cause. If you wish to be known as a live one you will have to become a live member of the Club.

For Catalogs, application blanks and all information apply to the Secretary of the Club, Henry R. Ingalls, Greenville, N. Y.

CAMDEN, N. J.

The New Jersey Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association will hold one of the largest shows in the East at Camden, N. J., January 2nd to 6th, 1912, in the Third Regiment Armory, which has 40,000 square feet; also the best lighted armory in the state. The above association was organized January 7th, 1911, and to date has over 400 members. As it is a state organization, they expect to have a thousand members by January 1st, 1912. They are also arranging to coop, at the lowest estimate, 5,000 birds. Send your address to W. Lee Springs, secretary, and ask that a copy of the premium list be mailed to you when ready for delivery.

RED CHAMPION.

The owner of this bird claims that it is one of the best S. C. Rhode Island Reds in existence. Bred and owned by Edwin R. Cornish, 115 W. Huron St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

PENDER, NEB.

The Northeast Nebraska Poultry Association is preparing their premium list for their show next December. Judge W. C. Ellison, of Minneapolis, will place the awards. The Association solicits the support of all breeders in its territory and will make it interesting for them to show at Pender next season. Write to R. W. Seymour for full information.

THE APPALACHIAN EXPOSITION POULTRY SHOW.

The Appalachian Exposition Poultry Show will be held at Knoxville, Tenn., the last week in September. Because of the eminent satisfaction he gave last year as manager and director, L. B. Audigier, editor of The Industrious Hen, and president of the Tennessee Branch of the American Poultry Association, has been asked by Pres. L. D. Tyson, of the Exposition Company, to take charge of the Poultry Department again this year, and he has consented to do so. Mr. Audigier worked with untiring energy and zeal to have the poultry show last year the standard of ideal shows and the success of his undertaking is shown by the undisputed position it holds among the prominent shows of the country. Birds were exhibited from many Eastern and Northern States and a hearty invitation is extended to every reader of this journal to attend the poultry show and at the same time take in the beauties of our great Exposition, whose gates will be thrown open from September 12 to 30.

Poultry Committee.

CLAREMONT, N. H.

The Claremont Poultry Association has been organized and their first show will be held next winter. The dates have not yet been fixed. An enthusiastic lot of breeders are behind the organization and the show will undoubtedly be a successful one. E. F. Howe is secretary of the association.

MERIDEN, CONN.

The largest show ever attempted in this state will be the nineteenth exhibition of our association combined with the show of the Middlesex Association. The show will open at 9 a. m., Friday, Dec. 29. We will complete the judging on that day and have all ribbons "both special and regular" on the coops before Saturday noon.

Hall will be closed to all on Sunday. Monday, Jan. 1, 1912, all cash premiums will be paid and special premiums given out. For full information and premium list write W. H. Gough, secretary, Meriden, Conn.

Column of Thoughts

No man is ever wholly unhappy until he is deprived of all hope.

Money may be the root of all evil, but it is the root of much friendship.

They who forgive most, shall be most forgiven.

The road of prejudice never leads to the realm of pleasure.

Some people cannot stay out of bad company even when they are alone.

Some men will do anything on earth to get money—except work.

Worry, from any source, weakens, takes away courage and shortens life.

The man who expects to get something for nothing usually gets nothing for something.

Some men are better than others because they have not had the same chance to be mean.

Birth, youth and joy,
A day or two in clover;
Work, age and the grave,
And our little flurry's over.

There are loyal hearts,
There are spirits brave,
There are souls that are warm and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

There are a lot of smart people who haven't sense enough to keep it to themselves.

All things may come to him who waits, but he hasn't always the price to pay for them after they arrive.

Even food for thought is sometimes adulterated.

There are very few places a man can go after he goes broke.

Time is the hardest thing in the world to kill when you try to kill it.

The fellow who jumps at conclusions frequently slips when he alights.

The world may owe every man a living, but it doesn't pay interest on the debt.

Labor is that which a man does that he doesn't want to; everything else is play.

Most people are lucky in not being able to get what they think they want.

"All the world's a stage," and some there be who find it a mighty "slow coach."

Young men are full of "go," and that perhaps explains why so many of them "go broke."

PARRISH STRAIN
Columbian Wyandottes

The past season I furnished birds that won the blue in New York, Indiana, Illinois, Massachusets, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Washington, Iowa, Arizona and nearly every state south of the Ohio river,

At the Tennessee State Fair show, September, 1910, which was pronounced the largest as well as of the highest quality in its history, in an extra strong class of Columbian Wyandottes I won first pen, first cock, first and second hen, first, second and third cockerel, first, second, third, fourth and fifth pullet.

If you want a show bird or breeders you can do better here than elsewhere.

Big Profits From A Small Piece Of Ground

The author of "The Smith Method of Poultry Keeping" cleared $2,437.72 in one year from a space only 40 by 60 feet in a large city. This is the best, most comprehensive and practical system we know of for keeping many fowls on a small lot; produces summer conditions in winter and makes hens shell out eggs when prices are highest. Complete instructions for care and feeding. No elaborate equipment required and all work and care is cut down to the minimum. Is also well adapted for large plants. Easy to build and easy to operate. Price $1.00 including a year's subscription to POULTRY SUCCESS, the best and most popular poultry journal.

Column of Smiles

When it comes to "raising chickens" no white man can give the southern darkey any points. He's an expert.

A fowl ball—a chicken croquette.

The young cockerel was fretting about his development, but his wise old mother gave him excellent advice: "Don't get into a stew," she said, "don't get into a stew."

The hen-thief, when asked by the judge how he came to steal Robinson's chickens, replied: "I am trying to think, judge, just gin me time." "Very well," said the judge, "I will give you six months." And he kept his word.

In a chicken stew you need chickens too.

The Rhode Island Red is an excellent fowl but if you are looking for something really "mitey" how will an old cheese do?

The drop in the price of eggs during the warm days of Spring is correctly attributed to "ova-production."

Give us a rest," begged the hen as she became broody after laying out her litter. "I'll give you arrest," replied the owner, as he threw her into the prison for setting hens.

No, Peter, a seller of fowls is not the same as a cellar of fowls, and a cellar of fowls is not necessarily a foul cellar, though it is pretty likely to become one.

"Hit mus' be er heap of expense ter keep sech er lot er chickings," said Erastus Pinkly, as he stopped at the gate to cast a glance at Farmer Corntossel's poultry yard.

"Oh, not such a greddeal," said Farmer Corntossel.

"What am de principal items ob expense?"

"Powder an' shot."

How dear to my heart is the old speckled rooster
Which fond recollection brings back to my view,
With spurs long and pointed and curving, he uster
Go crowing around till he made the air blue;
And when some strong rooster would come to do battle,
How quick would the old chap get up on his guard;
He'd make the eyeballs of the strange rooster rattle,
And scatter his feathers all over the yard;
The old speckled rooster, the mongred bred rooster,
The fifty-cent rooster that scrapped in the yard.

Ernest Kellerstrass Says

I Made $18,178.53 Net Profit In One Year Selling Chickens And Eggs

I took a flock of 1,638 chickens and made them net me a profit of $11.09 per bird in 12 months' time. My farm and books are open for inspection to any State Poultry Experimental Station. If your station doesn't find the above statements true, I'll donate $1,000 in cash to your institute.

My New Book Tells HOW I DID IT

In my new poultry book I tell how I made $3,600 in one season from 30 hens on a lot 24x40, by feeding the scraps from my table three times a day. I'll give you the names of those who paid me over $2,000 for the eggs alone from these fowls—you can refer to them.

I'll tell you how I make my chickens weigh 2½ pounds at 8 weeks of age.

I tell how I prepared my chickens for the show room, so that I won over 90 per cent of all the blue ribbons offered during 1907 and 1908. This has never been published before.

This book covers all branches—it tells everything necessary to success with poultry. It tells you what I have done—how I started.

I Tell You Everything That is Necessary to Success in the Poultry Business.

It also gives you my opinion and experience that I have had with advertising solicitors of poultry journals.

It also gives my opinion and experience that I have had with poultry judges in the show room, and why, in my opinion, the little fellow don't get what he thinks he ought to have in the show room. I tell it just as I have seen it and experienced it. There are several pages in this book taken from my records, and from my cash book and ledger. There are no secrets—I tell it all.

Try my way and you can raise them by the hundreds

I Send the Book on Free Examination.

Write me by letter or use coupon below, enclosing a one-dollar bill. I will promptly send you the book with privilege of FREE examination. You can return book and get your money back if you choose. The books are going like hot cakes and if you want one of the present edition, you should act at once—NOW. Remember, you are not asked to keep the book if it don't please.

RED FEATHER FARM, ROSE AND S. C. REDS

Won 85 prizes at N. Y., Boston and Providence, 1909-10 and 1910-11. We note with interest that many of the foremost breeders of R. C. Reds, are making their strongest bid for patronage upon the fact that they have—or claim to have—one or two birds more or less remotely related to our great cock "SENSATION," (1st and color special at N. Y. and Boston, 1909-10, and also at N. Y. and Providence, 1910.) Why not place your order where they have the entire stock which produced "SENSATION," (his brothers, sisters, sons and daughters and dozens of rich red females to make the proper "nick" in color and blood lines) and WILL PRODUCE BIRDS OF LIKE QUALITY and not take a chance

EGGS UTILITY, $1 and $2 per setting: $6 and $10 per 100: $50 and $80 per 1000.

"Ringlet" First Prize Exhibition Pen and Winners of Sweepstakes Silver Cup at Madison Square Garden, New York.

"RINGLETS" SET THE SEAL OF CHAMPIONSHIP

AT THE IMPERIAL SHOW OF ALL AMERICA,
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, NEW YORK
THIS WINTER OF 1910 AND 1911

E. B. THOMPSON'S BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS win as follows:

First prize on cock, first and third on Cockerels; first and second on Exhibition Pens; the Imperial Prize of the show, special for Champian Male; Diploma presented by the Am. Poultry Association for best Cockerel; special for four best Cockerels; Sterling Silver sweepstakes Cup for best Plymouth Rock hatched in 1910, male or female, any variety, Challenge Silver Cup for best Exhibition Pen, won for third time and final Ownership; special for best pen mated to produce Exhibition Cockerels; special for best colored Male; special for best shaped Male; $25 special prize presented by the New York Show for finest display. Three times as many first prizes as any competitor. More first prizes than all competitors combined. All Silver Cups and Cash Specials.

My exhibit was one of the wonders of the show, every bird wearing the matchless "Ringlet" barring.

My three First Prize Males stood out like Stars.
My First Prize Champion Cockerel is the finest of All time.

This new Championship Record stands monumental above all other records—an achievement far and beyond anything ever hitherto accomplished by any Barred Rock breeder since the New York Show was founded. Furthermore, every Silver Trophy that has ever been offered on Barred Rocks at Madison Square Garden to be won three times has been finally won by me and is now my absolute property. This includes the $100 Challenge Trophy and the $100 Association Cup.

For more than 20 years at New York my "Ringlet" victories have been complete. The "Ringlet" record of First on Exhibition Pen three years in succession is the undisputed champion. My clean sweep of 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th prizes on Pullets has never been approached in Madison Square Garden and stands alone and unequalled.

A $2,000,000,000 Poultry Product Builder

Oculum, based on U. S. Government diagnosis, comes to the relief of the long-suffering poultry producers with this momentous assertion: "I can inoculate your fowls and increase the annual value of the poultry of the U. S. from $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000. Let me help you."

Oculum has overcome and thrust to the heart, White Diarrhea Cholera, Roup and Gapes.

You can raise fowls in any quantity at a sure profit.

Oculum destroys the Cholera, Roup and White Diarrhea germ that kills yearly ⅔ of all fowls hatched, and also the Gape Worm.

"OCULUM"

Raising chickens, ducks and turkeys will in the future be both a pleasure and profit.

Oculum is the best tonic for all fowls.

Large poultry plants are buying Oculum in quantities to be given away with orders for day-old chicks to insure the raising of them.

The financier, poultryman, farmer, merchant, in fact, all who raise, buy or sell poultry, will be enormously benefitted by the use of Oculum.

Oculum is a scientific remedy recommended by America's poultry leaders—U. R. Fishel, Bradley Bros., A. G. Duston, Foxhurst Farm, J. C. Fishel & Son, P. J. Armstrong, Mrs. Ellen Jacque, Oscar E. Miles, J. Gaylord Blair, Geo. A. Ruessler, N. R. Reynolds, Lewis T. McLean, Hugh Ross and hundreds of others.

Don't cling to the exploded theory that "nothing will cure," but join the army of money-making poultry raisers, who, after demonstration, are marching to success with the Oculum banner waving in the breezes.

Join now. For sale in three sizes, $1.00, 50c and 25c, by all progressive dealers and druggists. If yours does not handle it, send us his name and address. On receipt of price, Oculum will be mailed direct to you. Circular with Government diagnosis of Cholera and White Diarrhea free.

Order now and help make poultry a $2,000,000,000 industry. Sample with dropper, 10c. (6)

From Bradley Bros., Lee, Mass

"Oculum" appears to be the long-needed remedy for cases of liver and bowel trouble, heretofore regarded as incurable. Have tried it also with satisfactory results upon a few cases of baby chicks—"incurables"—which bid fair to fully recover.

From A. G. Dustin, Rose Lawn Poultry Farm South Framingham, Mass.

I enclose $1.00 for bottle of "Oculum." I broke my bottle accidentally and find I cannot keep house without it, not so much for a cure all as for a smart tonic. What about handling this for you?

A GOOD LIVING

$1,500.00 from 60 Hens in Ten Months on a City Lot 40 Feet Square

Note the condition of the three months' old pullets at the School Farm. These pullets and their ancestors for seven generations have never been allowed to run outside the coops.

TO the average poultryman that would seem impossible and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden 40 feet wide by 40 feet long, we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practiced by the American people, still it can be accomplished by the

Philo System

The Philo System Is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry

and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success

from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks

are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler without any loss, and the broilers are of the very best quality, bringing here 3 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-Months-Old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each Per Month

in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using.

Our new book, THE PHILO SYSTEM OF POULTRY KEEPING, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell

One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel

Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves 2 Cents on Each Chicken

No lamp required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps, or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Testimonials

South Britain, Conn., April 19, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have followed your system as close as I could; the result is a complete success. If there can be any improvement on nature your brooder is it. The first experience I had with your System was last December. I hatched 17 chicks under two hens, put them as soon as hatched in one of your brooders out of doors and at the age of three months I sold them at 35c a pound. They then averaged 2½ pounds each, and the man I sold them to said they were the finest he ever saw, and he wants all I can spare this season. Yours truly,

A. E. NELSON.

Elmira, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1909.

Mr. E. R. Philo, Elmira, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—No doubt you will be interested to learn of our success in keeping poultry by the Philo System. Our first year's work is now nearly completed. It has given us an income of over $500.00 from six pedigree hens and one cockerel. Had we understood the work as well as we now do after a year's experience, we could have easily made $1,000.00 from the six hens. In addition to the profits from the sale of pedigree chicks, we have cleared over $960.00 running our hatchery plant, consisting of 56 Cycle hatchers. We are pleased with the results and expect to do better the coming year. With best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours, (MRS.) C. P. GOODRICH.

FROM POULTRY

The Poultry Review

A Monthly Magazine Devoted to Progressive Methods of Poultry Keeping

The Poultry Review is edited by E. W. Philo, author of the Philo System Book and founder of the Philo National Poultry Institute.

It is edited and printed on a practical poultry farm, where experiments are being conducted and reported in full in the Review. New discoveries and improvements are described and illustrated, and each issue contains a number of letters of experience and suggestion from followers of the Philo System.

Rev. W. W. Cox, our associate editor, is conducting a Philo System Plant, and his "Notes from a Six Hen Plant" in each issue have created considerable interest, and contain much valuable instruction. The first year's work on this plant netted over $500.

In addition to the best original articles it is possible to obtain, a review of the best articles from over a hundred publications is made—the "cream" of the poultry press arranged for the busy reader.

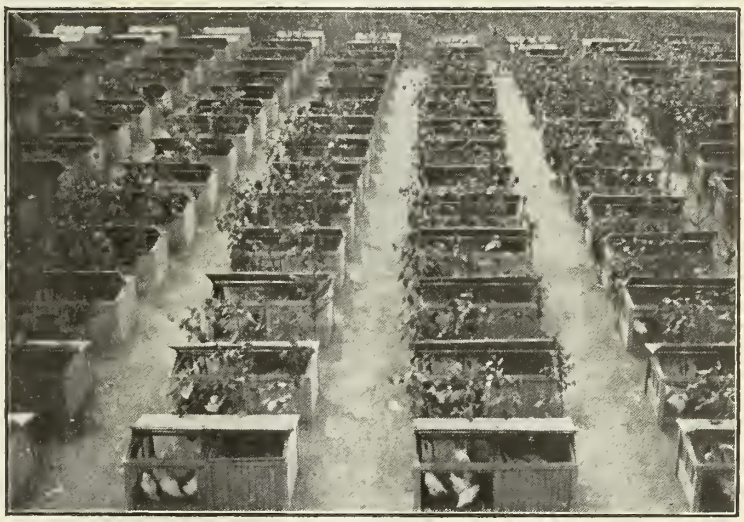

Photo taken from the roof of the Philo National Poultry Institute, showing a portion of the Poultry Plant where there are now over 5,000 pedigreed White Orpingtons on less than half an acre of land.

Another thing that is proving of great value to our subscribers is our Information Department. Our editors are always ready to help subscribers. When any difficult problem arises and you see no way of solving it, write us, and we will give you a prompt personal reply. It is quite probable that we have had a similar experience and can help you. Although no charge is made for this service, it is worth many times the subscription price.

For 1911 the Poultry Review guarantees the largest circulation of any paper of its kind—over 100,000 copies monthly, reaching the best class of poultrymen in every state and over thirty foreign countries.

TESTIMONIALS

E. R. Philo, Publisher Poultry Review, Elmira, N. Y. Box 214, Medicine Hat, Alta., Can., April 16, 1910.

Dear Sir:—Of all the poultry journals I take, I would fail in all rather than in the Review as I really like your paper the best of them all. Now I do not say this to curryfavor, nor for any other purpose, because I really like your paper for the pithy and sound articles. There is no dry reading in it as there is in other poultry journals, such as accounts of poultry shows that do not really concern any one but those who are written about. I do not think that any one in any part of the country cares who wins and who does not. It is all right in a local show, written and published by a local paper. Well, success and great success for the Review, and I hope to receive it regularly in the future.

Very sincerely yours,
R. G. Wetmore.

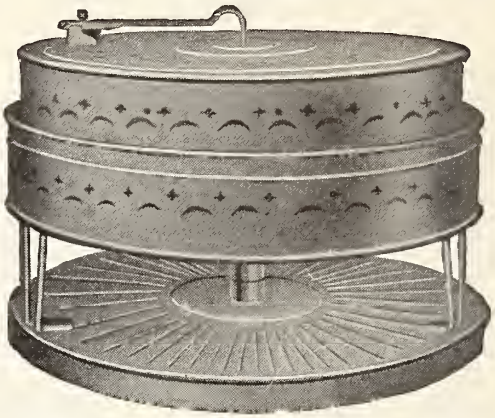
Cycle Brooder Hatcher, a complete all metal, fire-proof hatching and brooding plant for only $8.00.



The All-Metal, 50-egg Cycle Hatcher only $6.00, complete.

Our New Discoveries Make Poultry Keeping Easy and Profits Sure

Our machines were used exclusively in the original Philo System plant, where over $1,500 FROM 60 HENS IN TEN MONTHS has been cleared from the sale of eggs, baby chicks and fowls, raised on a city lot 40 feet square. One of the largest hatching plants in America saved over $700 this year by using our system of brooding. We sell the best brooder ever made for only $2.50.

One party hatched and raised $500 worth of poultry last year with four metal mothers, and hundreds of others are delighted with our machines and our new way of raising poultry. Our combined machine hatches and broods perfectly at the same time, with only one lamp and one-fifth the oil used in other machines. Once filling the lamp completes the hatch. It runs as steadily as a clock in any room from cellar to garret, and our Long Burning Safety Lamp runs on for weeks without attention. It is the only machine that airs the eggs in the natural way and applies the heat to the chicken like the mother hen.

Ernest Kellerstrass Says

I Made $18,178.53 Net Profit In One Year Selling Chickens And Eggs

I took a flock of 1,638 chickens and made them net me a profit of $11.09 per bird in 12 months' time. My farm and books are open for inspection to any State Poultry Experimental Station. If your station doesn't find the above statements true, I'll donate $1,000 in cash to your institute.

My New Book Tells HOW I DID IT

In my new poultry book I tell how I made $3,600 in one season from 30 hens on a lot 24x40, by feeding the scraps from my table three times a day. I'll give you the names of those who paid me over $2,000 for the eggs alone from these fowls—you can refer to them.

I'll tell you how I make my chickens weigh 2½ pounds at 8 weeks of age.

I tell how I prepared my chickens for the show room, so that I won over 90 per cent of all the blue ribbons offered during 1907 and 1908. This has never been published before.

This book covers all branches—it tells everything necessary to success with poultry. It tells you what I have done—how I started.

I Tell You Everything That is Necessary to Success in the Poultry Business.

It also gives you my opinion and experience that I have had with advertising solicitors of poultry journals.

It also gives my opinion and experience that I have had with poultry judges in the show room, and why, in my opinion, the little fellow don't get what he thinks he ought to have in the show room. I tell it just as I have seen it and experienced it. There are several pages in this book taken from my records, and from my cash book and ledger. There are no secrets—I tell it all.

June.

This is the Last Month of the Season When Chicks Can Be Hatched Advantageously. Suggestions Regarding Feeding. A Good Remedy for Bowel Trouble in the Old Birds.

By OBSERVER.

HAVE you finished hatching? You will do well to remember that this is the last month when hatching should be done, and even this month is under suspicion by many.

Don't misunderstand me. Chickens can be hatched and reared in July, August, September, October or in any other month, but the hatching and rearing will be under unfavorable conditions. It is better to make nature an ally than an antagonist.

Wild birds have a natural breeding season—a season when they mate, lay eggs and incubate them and rear the young which they hatch. The hen was once a wild bird, and as such had a natural breeding season, and though now and for centuries domesticated, it is possible that some remnant of the old wild instinct remains uneradicated. At any rate, the natural breeding season of wild birds is still the best breeding season of domesticated fowls, the season when eggs are laid in the greatest numbers, the vitality of the germs is the strongest, and the chickens hatched have the best chances of survival.

In all breeding operations we should be time-observers, but not time-servers. Chickens should be hatched long enough before cold weather comes to attain their maturity before its arrival. A breed which will mature in seven months should be hatched earlier than one which will mature in five months. Asiatic fowls require a longer time to grow than Mediterranean breeds, and must, therefore, be hatched earlier. By maturity, however, in this connection we do not mean full growth, but sufficient development of frame and organs to permit the pullets to begin laying. All fowls, even the active, little Leghorn, continue to grow for a year or more. The frame may not develop very much, but the muscles increase in size and heavier weight is attained.

As the labors attendant upon hatching diminish, those attendant upon rearing increase. From now on, the poultry breeder will think less of hatching than of rearing the chicks. And he will find much to interest him in this study. It is entirely possible that he may look back upon last year's operations and discover some mistakes he then made. These he should try to correct. As much as is known already upon the rearing of chickens, there may be still more to be known. It is not likely that improvements in rearing chickens will be made by great changes. As a rule, advances in knowledge are small, but "every little added to what you already have, makes a little bit more." Last season I tried feeding ground oyster shells—not the usual cracked shells, but granulated—to my small chickens. I am inclined to think this helped them, especially in the growth of bone, and shall continue it this year. These finely ground oyster shells with the chick-sized grit, were mixed in the soft food; but, of course, could be used in a dry mash, if so desired. It is certain that chickens must have mineral matters to grow their skeletons. Such matters, of course, are found in their grain foods, but it seems probable that a larger supply than is furnished by the grain may be desirable.

At any rate, a year's experience, while not fully convincing, has been sufficiently favorable to induce me to continue the use of the fine oyster shells.

As I am in a mood for confession, I may as well confess to another practice—the use of sulphate of iron in the drinking water. This acts as a tonic, toning up the system; as an astringent, checking undue looseness of the bowels; and as a germ destroyer, killing or rendering inert some germs which might find their way into the body through the water. I find, also, that it tends to prevent the growth of white feathers in chickens which are of dark plumage like Brown Leghorns or Black-breasted Red Games. It may be used once a week, or once a day; about twice or three times a week seems best to me. It is cheap. A specially prepared, chemically pure, and very finely powdered article, can be bought for twenty-five cents a pound, while the crystals can be purchased for much less. A third of a teaspoonful in three gallons of water is enough of the most hightly refined article, so that a pound will last a long time in the average fancier's yard. One needs to use just enough to tinge the water in color and give it a slightly brackish taste. I find it useful, also, to keep it before the sitting hens, as they are very apt, especially in warm weather, to suffer from diarrhoea while incubating. This tendency to diarrhoea in sitting hens is a very great trial to the poultry breeder, for it leads to soiling the nests, to thinness in flesh, loss of heat in the body and sometimes to an absolute abandonment of their eggs. Just why such results should attend incubation I confess that I do not know. It may be that a change in diet, the lack of customary exercise, the confinement or something else is the cause. But the fact is well-known, and a remedy for it is needed. Sulphate of iron in the drinking water is not a complete preventive or cure, but it is a decided help and is therefore worthy of a trial. But something more is needed. If some investigator will discover the cause, the remedy will be forthcoming. Until then use sulphate of iron in the water and make as little change in the diet as cicumstances will reasonably permit.

Summer Care of Late Hatched Chicks.

Notwithstanding the Popular Prejudice Against Late Hatched Chicks, It is Possible to Succeed With Them and Secure Better Results Occasionally Than Are Obtained With Extremely Early Hatches.

By C. E. PETERSEN.

THE winter has been so severe in most all States in the Union that eggs have not only been at a premium, but, of still greater importance, it has been almost impossible to get strongly fertile eggs for hatching purposes, which has belated hatching to such an extent that thousands of chicks will be hatched late in May and during the month of June. This is a time of the year when chickens should grow apace, and they will if they receive the right kind of care, but if this is not given there will be greater mortality among the chicks than if hatched two months earlier. There is a tendency among poultry keepers to neglect these late broods, on the superstition that the weather is warm and much of the danger past, therefore little care more than common is needed, when the real fact is that these late chicks, to grow and develop into fully mature birds, need extraordinary care, or they will in most every instance stand still in their growth and become complete failures. On the other hand, if the right care is given them, there is no reason why they should not make satisfactory progress from the day they are hatched till they fully mature. We have four sure months to accomplish our purpose, July, August, September and October, and one doubtful November, which may be fine all through or very disagreeable. This length of time, however, is more than enough to develop our chicks into fine birds if we pursue the right course.

Much will depend on the male bird in the breeding yard, for at this time he has been mated for a long time, and if we are to keep his procreative powers intact he needs special care; separate him morning and night, and give him a good feed and a liberal supply of fresh meat, and, of course, we take for granted, that he is free from vermin.

If an incubator is used during this month (June) the care of these late hatched chicks begins right here, from the time the embryo chick begins to develop in the shell. Fresh air is just as essential to the embryo chick as to the newly hatched chick, and a good deal of this fresh air is administered by turning and cooling the eggs, the latter being an absolute essential to a hatch of good strong chicks. More cooling is necessary at this time of the year than in the early spring, and except this is attended to a strong hatch cannot be expected, and whatever chicks do hatch will not be of the kind that will do for our purpose, but will give us nothing but vexation. I am thoroughly convinced that cooling of the eggs has everything to do with the livability of the chicks, as I have tried experiment after experiment which to me have proven the matter beyond a doubt, whatever may be said to the contrary.

Leave the chicks in the incubator for a few hours after the hatch is over, and then remove them to the brooder, which should be heated to 95 degrees the first week. I believe in plenty of warmth for the little ones the first few days, and being kept quiet. Then let them out of the brooder yard onto the ground, and from this on all will depend on the care they receive if they are to develop into birds of merit or into runts. For the first week I feed bread and sweet milk, and there is positively nothing better we can feed them; than a mix'ure of small grain and plenty of steel cut oat meal. We are especially fond of the great English preparation, Spratt's chick meal; we know of no better food to grow strong birds on. A little cooked meat must also be supplied them and I may say here that as the season advances and the insect life becomes less and less, we must supply the need to secure success. If you have plenty of spare milk, don't give it all to the pigs. Let the chicks have all they desire, but not to the exclusion of clean cold water. If the youngsters have plenty of range, it is enough to feed them after the first few weeks three times a day, but see to it that this is done at stated times. I honestly believe that poor food fed at regular intervals will give better results than good food fed in a slipshod manner. As soon as the mother shakes off the chicks, or when done with the brooder, they should be moved to quarters where they will not crowd one another or they will not thrive. If kept in close, hot, ill-ventilated quarters, they will make no progress; in fact, what is gained during the day will be lost during the night. Better, far, let them roost under the canopy of the heavens than in that kind of a shelter. Let the roosting coop be large, and with an open front, wired to keep out intruders, and they will flourish. Again, separate the sexes as soon as they get to be troublesome or they will mature too soon—that is, into an undersized, bantam-like runt. During the heat of July and August be vigilant and observant regarding the need of the young stock. Provide plenty of shade, and if you have an orchard you can do nothing better than let these late hatched chicks have the use of it. In such a place success is sure, and they will simply revel in the luxury of plenty of shade, lying around and enjoying life and doing nothing but grow and chase bugs. Give plenty of water. Let them out early in the morning, for, as it is time we are after, the earlier they begin the day the better. Examine closely for vermin and dust freely with some good insect powder. With such treatment the late hatched chicks will come on all right and give you no disappointments.

TWO SINGLE COMB BUFF LEGHORNS OF SUPERIOR QUALITY.

And here we may conclude by quoting Mr. James E. Rice, who says the six things to keep in mind when raising chickens are:

First, keep them warm.
Second, keep them dry.
Third, keep them clean.
Fourth, keep them busy.
Fifth, keep them hungry.
Sixth, keep them growing.

In the development of great laying strains, heredity is an important but not the sole factor. Constitutional vigor and increased digestive power evidently must be reckoned with.

The Natural Enemies of Poultry.

Some of the Animals That are Responsible for Great Losses Among the Fowls, and Especially the Chicks. Their Methods of Operation and the Best Means of Protecting the Fowls.

BY A. LEWIS.

EXPERIENCED poultry breeders know the natural enemies of their feathered pets, and how to avoid loss from them, but the beginner, when he finds dead birds, is often at a loss to know what has killed them. So it is to the beginner that these few facts may prove helpful.

If the experienced breeder, on making his morning rounds, finds a quantity of feathers scattered about and a bird or two gone, he at once suspects a fox or a neighbor's dog; or, possibly, his own dog has turned traitor. A good watch dog is the poultry breeder's best friend, but beware of the dog with hunting blood, whether a neighbor's or your own. He may not seem to notice the hens, may even pass the pheasant's run with only a glance but the instinct, stronger even than his fear of man, is urging him to kill, and sooner or later that instinct must be obeyed. Some dogs also have a fondness for eggs. Be sure that your own dog is faithful, and do not allow a strange dog on the premises. If possible, have the boundary fence dog proof. If a fox has caused the trouble he should be hunted down and killed. If careful watch is kept the following night he may return, when he may be shot. A good steel trap, if properly handled and hidden, should catch the marauder.

BLACK ORPINGTON MALE.

If a breeder finds a number of birds, perhaps an entire flock, dead, with wounds in the neck and, possibly the brains eaten out; or, if he finds empty eggs shells with a small hole in one end through which the egg has been sucked, he may be very sure that some member of the weasel family is the culprit. The weasel is not without his good points, as he is an unrelenting foe to rats and mice, and when domesticated, will quickly rid a place of these vermin, but he is at all times a formidable foe to poultry and rabbits. The weasel kills his prey by piercing the brain with his long, sharp teeth, and then sucking the blood. He kills for the pleasure of killing, and will generally kill every bird in a pen which he has entered. If enough victims are available, he will not eat any of the flesh, but will suck the blood of each one and possibly eat the brains.

The English pole cat belongs to the weasel family, and is said to be more deadly than any other animal of its size, and very bold, attacking even turkeys and geese. The stoat, or ermine mink, marten and badger are all of this same family, and all attack their prey in the same humane way, causing immediate unconsciousness, and never releasing their hold until the last sign of life has disappeared.

Any of these animals may be caught in a steel trap such as is used to catch foxes, or they may be caught in a pitfall, five feet deep, narrow at the top and wide in the middle, hidden with sticks and leaves. Pieces of paste made of powdered sal ammoniac, white of egg, flour and honey, left in their haunts will prove fatal.

The skunk is very much less active than the weasel, but it will nevertheless create great havoc if it finds its way into the hen house. It eats the entrails and sometimes the brain of its victim. As the skunk is easily trailed and absolutely fearless, it is generally easy to get near enough to shoot it.

If the carcass of a hen is found, probably near the roost, with the flesh torn away, perhaps, in several places, it is very likely the work of a rat or rats. As a rule, rats do not attack old birds, but they will sometimes, even when other food is obtainable. A poultry plant is an ideal location for rats. The unlimited supply of feed, and numerous places to hide, attract them in large numbers. It is not safe to use poisoned bait for rats, as they may be suspicious and carry it away from their holes to some place where the poultry will find it. Plaster of Paris placed near the holes will kill the rats that eat it, without being a menace to the birds. But perhaps the surest and simplest way to rid a place of rats is by the use of a good spring trap. Scald the trap occasionally, and keep it as much as possible from contact with the hands.

Rats will carry off young chicks and eggs bodily, but when an old bird is killed by them the carcass is generally left. It is when chicks disappear and no trace is left by the thief that it is most difficult to place the blame, as almost any animal that preys on young chicks will occasionally carry away the carcass. If the loss occurs during the day it may be due to hawks or crows. It is when the broods are allowed to roam in open fields that they are in greatest danger of falling prey to their feathered enemies. These birds will also steal eggs when they find them.

If the chicks are taken from under the hen at night, it may be a rat that is to blame. Rats often forage during the day as well. But when a poultryman notices that he is losing chicks during the night or day his suspicion falls, and generally with perfect justice, on the cat. The best means of keeping cats, as well as hawks and crows, away from a poultry plant is by the skillful use of a good gun. A good watch dog will greatly discourage the visits of stray cats. Cats are probably the worst enemies the young chicks have. Their victims in a season will probably number more than those of all the above mentioned animals combined. Some breeders have such a deep-rooted hatred for them that they condemn even the "trusted family cat." To a certain extent they are right, but cats have been known to prove faithful to the end, never harming the chicks but killing quantities of rats and mice. If you have such a cat do not let anyone persuade you to part with her, for she will more than earn her home. But these cats are rare, and it is just as well not to trust your cat too far. Do not put temptation in her way by allowing too free access to the chicks. I know one cat that used, habitually, to sleep in the brooder with the young chicks and she never harmed a chick, though she was an excellent ratter and would often kill birds. The son of this cat, was, if anything, a better ratter than the old one was, and has never been known to harm a chick. But, as I have said, these cats are exceptions. The poultry breeder has no worse enemy than the ordinary cat. As it works by stealth and generally at night, and leaves no part of its victim as a clue, a cat may make quite a hole in a flock of chicks before its presence is discovered. The only sure way to prevent this is to keep the chicks, at all times, in runs that a cat cannot enter.

The two White Wyandottes portrayed above are first cock and first hen at Celeveland, 1911, in one of the largest classes shown anywhere last winter and in competition with the winners at several previous shows. The birds were bred and are owned by Chas. McClave, Box S, New London, O., who for four years in succession has won more prizes on White Wyandottes at the Cleveland show than all other exhibitors combined.

Some men are born to succeed, others to fail, because some have gumption enough to do what they are capable of doing and others lack such gumption.

What kind of a breed do you want? Remember that, broadly speaking, breeds may be arranged under three classes, great layers, general purpose fowls, great table breeds. If you wish the first, don't select the third, or if you wish the second, don't choose either the first or third. Don't try to make a round bolt fit a square hole.

The Hen, a Factor in Civilization.

The Humble Little Hen Occupies a Position Not Generally Credited to Her. A Few Facts Regarding Her Advent and Her Development as a Factor in the Lives of the People

By H. S. BABCOCK.

"PEACE hath her victories no less renowned than war." When Milton wrote these words he uttered a profound thought, for the "Pride, pomp and circumstance of glorious war" are peculiarly fitted to captivate the human mind, but it is nevertheless true that the victories achieved by peace are those which mark the progress of civilization, that lift men to a higher plane of living.

One of the greatest conquests of man, one of the victories of peace which count more for progress than those won by martial prowess, was the subjugation of the wild gallus and its domestication.

SILVER LACED WYANDOTTE.
First prize hen at Waterloo, Ia., Jan., 1911. Bred and owned by A. L. Moore, Norway, Ia.

Modern civilization owes more to the humble hen than has ever been acknowledged.

At first it is probable she was kept for a mere pet, as might be a squirrel, a handsome bird or any other living creature. The love for pets is firmly ingrained in human nature, and a little child will soon lose interest in dolls and toys if something "alive" is given it to play with. And men are but children larger grown, and early men were very childlike before life had been rendered complex by the arts of civilization. In this sense, the fancier antedates the practical poultryman, for fowls were undoubtedly first kept as a fancy.

Under domestication the fowl lost much of its native wildness, and through the abundance of the food supply began to increase the number of eggs laid. And as these eggs became more numerous, men began to realize that the hen could render a return for her keep, and the whilom pet began to assume a profitable character. Her eggs first and later her flesh became a source of food supply for man. With the assumption of such a profitable character, poultry keeping became more complex—to the fancier was added the practical character, which in time was to differentiate poultrymen into two or more less distinct classes.

As time wore on the hen became a subject for study. The best methods of breeding and feeding, the increasing of her prolificness, the division into breeds and varieties having specific characteristics, these and other matters occupied more or less of human attention and thought, and poultry breeding began to grow into an industry. Such was probably the genesis of the poultry industry.

The hen, at length, was fully recognized as a factor in providing food supplies for individuals and communities. We remember of reading years ago about some one who visited an Irish peasant in his miserable hut and who asked the peasant how he managed to subsist. His reply was that he had his little plot of "praties" (potatoes), a pig and "two hins." These enabled him to eke out an existence. But earlier than that, the ancient Egyptians, according to Diodorus, the Sicilian, "not content with the natural production of these creatures, as among other nations, do themselves, from an innate love of art, increase the number of these birds to an unspeakable extent; for they do not hatch them by means of the birds, but, strange to say, they display with their own hands such intelligence and skill that they are not surpassed by nature's operations."

The allusion, while by no means very definite or clear, probably is to the use of "ovens," the forerunners of the modern incubators, by means of which the hatching of eggs in large numbers has been rendered possible. The Romans recognized the advantages of good layers, and Varro recommends that those should be selected which were "prolific egg-layers." Even artificial fattening by the cramming process was not unknown to the Romans, for Martial says: "The hen is easily fed on sweet meal and in darkness; so clever is the palate." In fact, all over the ancient world the hen was becoming known as the servant and helper of man.

Some one has said that "An army travels on its stomach," which means that the commissariat department is essential to the movement of armed hosts. It certainly is true that the great army of civilization travels on its stomach, and the providing of a food supply is one of the essential things for its progress. The domestic hen, through her developed and increased proficiency, has proved herself to be a certain, reliable and profitable source from which such a food supply may be drawn, and therefore an important element in human progress and civilization. In the aggregate this food supply is simply enormous—the figures are too great for human realization. The human mind can grasp clearly hundreds and thousands, but when it comes to comprehending hundreds of millions, and billions, the figures are not comprehended.

In other ways than as a source of food supply the hen has been a civilizing agent. She herself has been used as a means for demonstrating many important scientific truths, and science has become her debtor. Her eggs have been used in the arts in various manners and art and artisanship owe her much. She has awakened the dormant faculties of the human intellect, aroused speculation, produced new industries, furnished profitable employment for thousands, and in a multitude of ways aided in the triumphant march of civilization. But as a source of food supply and a factor in national wealth, her worth is the most clearly demonstrated, and the value of her conquest by man most clearly apparent.

Poultry Keeping as a Recreation.

Some of the Methods of an Amateur Who Has Succeeded in Making the Poultry Business a Profitable Side Line, and Who Has Found It to be Perfection as a Recreation From Other Business Cares.

By C. P. RICE.

MY experience in poultry keeping has been as a recreation, and from a town-lot standpoint. My methods, no doubt, would be grossly criticised by the successful poultrymen, but even if I have not conducted it with every degree of exactness, it has been a quiet recreative diversion.

It supplies a source of restfulness to the wearied minds of city merchants and professional men, especially those following my line of work—a Pharmacist. By taking up this sort of recreation and "making haste slowly" you can acquire a varied knowledge of poultry. If you find it a pleasure you find it interesting and will not be satisfied until you overcome every obstacle. If a chick is sick or the hens not laying as they should, you will use every means to ascertain why. By perusing the contents of the poultry papers and accepting the most plausible and sensible ideas you soon have acquired a fairly good knowledge of poultry, and in the event of the necessity of having to abandon professional or business life on account of ill-health, which is ofttimes the result of strenuous city living, you can readily take up this profitable line of work, thereby regaining health and prolonging your life.

At present thousands are going down the path of life at a very rapid gait. The mind and body are demanding recuperation from the strain, and many are finding that a very desirable and profitable way of obtaining the necessary recreation is by having a flock of beautiful fowls to care for. Real rest and pleasure, such as can hardly be procured in any other manner of recreation, is enjoyed by engaging in an hour or so a day in this kind of work.

Where your business requires most of your time, you will arise earlier in order to give your birds their proper attention, thereby benefiting by the freshness of the early morning. Two or three hours' work in the early morning with a few fowls has a wonderful effect on the system of a professional or office man, and enables him to follow his business duties with a feeling that he has a good start for the day.

It is extremely easy for you to obtain the necessary knowledge for a start. Many of the incubator manufacturers are publishing pamphlets that contain splendid advice for beginners as well as for those who have followed it for years. In fact, if all we read in these catalogs and the journals is "boiled down" and used with reasonably good judgment, you can hardly meet with failure. I don't write as an experienced poultryman—far from it. My experience is extremely limited, but even with my vivid knowledge of it I think I will continue to have success. My one reason for so thinking is because I love it.

It is very easy for a fellow's ambition to cause him to get too large a flock and his spare moments will not allow him to give them proper attention. And when he indulges in it to such an extent that it is made necessary to hire help, it ceases to be a recreation and no doubt less profitable.

Keeping fowls on a back yard plant requires the intensive system of poultry keeping. I have a space thirty-six feet long and six feet deep devoted to my fowls. This is roofed entire and boarded up in rear and ends, and front covered with 1-inch mesh wire and supplied with canvas curtains. The shed is five feet high in front and four feet high in back. It is divided into six compartments. The roosting and laying quarters of each compartment are three by six feet, built against the back, two feet from the ground, and floored, leaving a convenient opening for the fowls to pass up or down. The front of the roosting quarters is provided with two doors, one containing glass to allow sufficient light. Both doors are on a level with the floor to facilitate cleaning. The compartments are separated with 1-inch mesh wire, thus procuring excellent ventilation. This arrangement provides six or eight fowls with thirty-six square feet of scratching room and eighteen square feet roosting quarters. These compartments make suitable places to set hens, keeping the chicks upstairs until old enough to come down into the scratching pen. They also make good brooders for incubated chicks, and will accommodate fifty nicely until several weeks old.

Drinking troughs are arranged in suitable places upstairs in order to keep the water cool and clean. Abundance of clean straw is kept in the scratching pens, and the whole being roofed the fowls are easily kept dry and clean. Three of the compartments are devoted to White Leghorns and three to Rhode Island Reds. Lawn clippings keep them supplied with green stuff during the summer, and by feeding a mixture of whole grains morning and evening and a dry mash containing a small per cent of beef scraps and oil meal, kept before them at all times, I have had a successful egg yield. My egg yield has been about 75 per cent and my pleasure yield about 100 per cent.

Do We Need a Utility Standard?

A Few Facts in Support of the Present Book as Being a Guide for Utility Breeders as Well as Fanciers. It is Not Antagonistic to Utility, as Claimed by Some Breeders

By B. S. HARMON.

IT IS assumed by many that the Standard of Perfection issued by the American Poultry Association, because it describes the ideal fowl for exhibition purposes, is antagonistic to utility and is a hindrance rather than a help to the development of useful fowls. There has, therefore, been voiced a demand for a Utility Standard, but whether rightly or wrongly is not sufficiently clear to be self-evident.

While the Standard issued by the American Poultry Association may possibly be not the best Standard possible, still it must be admitted that it is a pretty good Standard and its latest revision the best one so far issued by the association. Barring a few typographical errors, which will be corrected in subsequent editions, it very clearly describes the characteristics of the different breeds and varieties therein represented. This, in and of itself, is an important service. If fowls are to be bred in their purity, and if distinct breeds and varieties are to exist, and especially if progress is to be made in breeding, some authoritative description of ideal fowls must be provided, and a common ideal must be presented to unify the efforts of the breeders. And certainly the Standard of Perfection accomplishes these things in a very efficient way.

But the advocates of a utility standard object that color receives too much attention and that the character of combs and crests are too much emphasized; that these are not utilitarian points and therefore, the Standard antagonizes utility. But in describing different varieties, in order to keep them distinct, color must have its due place, even in a utility standard; in describing combs and crests, the general character certainly must appear in any standard. And because ideal colors, combs and crests are described it by no means logically follows that utility has been sacrificed.

Utility depends, so far as it can be described in a Standard, upon shape, configuration and symmetry. And these points certainly receive more attention in the Standard of Perfection than does color, for example, or than does crest and comb. And certainly the shape as described in the present Standard, and as it has been described in past issues, is entirely consistent with the development of useful qualities. Take, for example, the description of a great table breed like the Cornish fowl, and note how the features, which make for attractive carcasses, carcasses full of meat and having as little offal as possible, are emphasized. Or consider the description of a prolific breed, like the Leghorn, and see how, so far as it is possible so to do from outward characteristics, great laying qualities are indicated. It is sometimes objected that the Wyandotte is described as too blocky and that blocky birds are not the best layers, but the objection is faulty in that it fails to consider that the Wyandotte is a general purpose fowl and therefore that its table characteristics are equally as important as its ability to produce many eggs, and, also, in that the assumption of length of body is a sure indication of great prolificacy, a matter that is at least open to doubt and is far from being settled. And often it is not the language of the Standard, so much as it is the interpretation of this language by some judge who is swayed by a hobby, which really is the subject of criticism.

The first Standard was issued by the American Poultry Association in 1874—less than forty years ago. And the value of the Standard upon the usefulness of domesticated fowls may be to some extent gauged by the progress made during the years since the first issue of the Standard. The average egg production has greatly increased, the weight and quality of market poultry has wonderfully improved, and the poultry industry has made gigantic strides forward. If the Standard was really antagonistic to utility, these facts seem to be difficult to be accounted for. It requires a tremendous internal progressive force to be imagined as existing in the industry to make such progress in the face of an antagonistic Standard. And it is to be remembered that the earlier issues of the Standard were more openly and avowedly made in the interests of exhibition fowls than the latest revision of this work. In the earlier days the exhibition idea more completely dominated the Standard makers than in our times, as it was entirely natural that it should. But the utility idea, in connection with exhibition excellence, has been gradually working in the deliberations of the American Poultry Association, and its effects are obvious in the Standard, until that work has become a pretty good Utility as well as Exhibition Standard. Until poultry shows can be conducted successfully upon the utility idea—and up to this time no one has shown how they can be—there certainly is a need for a Standard of Exhibition excellence, combined so far as may be with the utility idea, and such a Standard comes pretty near to existing in the Standard of Perfection issued by the American Poultry Association. Possibly time will reveal the necessity for, or the advantage of, further changes, but in its present form the latest edition of the Standard will be found useful to breeders of utility fowls.

Some Random Thoughts

By B. S. HARMON.

If one begins with the chicks, does things with deliberation, never makes a sudden and unexpected movement, even the most timid breeds will become tame.

In respect to the ingredients of a mash, whether wet or dry, I have found that equal parts by measure of corn meal, wheat bran finely ground, oat meal, and beef scraps, give excellent results. Other formulae are used with good results.

* *

It is a fact that some breeds are better fitted to thrive in one section, and other breeds in other sections of the country. In selecting a breed, don't forget to make your choice with reference to the climatic conditions it will have to undergo.

Keep down expenses. Cost of production is a tremendous factor in making a success or failure in the chicken business. If your chickens cost you 20 cents a pound and sell for 18, you are going backward. But if they cost you 15 cents a pound and sell for 16, you are getting ahead. But to be highly profitable you need to reduce the cost of production to the minimum and then secure for the product the maximum price.

To the one who goes into the niceties of selecting a breed it will be advisable to make a study of the soil on which the fowls are to be kept. For example, for a lime-stone region fowls which are white, or white with black markings, will be best adapted, while in a section where the soil is strongly impregnated with iron, or is of a red clay formation, black-red fowls are to be preferred. It is thought that, for this reason, New England is especially adapted to raising the Light Brahma, while Pennsylvania is favorable to the Brown Leghorn. Good fowls can be raised anywhere, but nature is a useful assistant.

To make anything pay it is necessary to sell it at the time when it will bring the top price. Whatever the poultryman's products, eggs, broilers, soft roasters, capons, he should so plan his business as to have them ready when the market demand is strong and prices are high. It makes quite a difference in the selling value whether one gets 19 or 34 cents a pound—the actual difference in soft roasters last season.

A soft roaster is a chicken grown rapidly and made ready for the market before its muscles have had time to become tough. Butchers, who years ago, before the refrigerator cars transported beef from the great slaughter houses of the West, used to depend upon local cattle to supply their demands, had learned that an old cow, is quickly fattened, made good, juicy, tender beef. Whether the growers of soft roasters learned of the butchers, or whether they discovered the secret for themselves, matters not, but it is a fact worth remembering that rapid growth and tender flesh are thus causally connected.

With soft roasters bringing at wholesale from 19 to 34 cents a pound, live weight, in the Boston, Mass., market, it is evident that they are a pretty good business proposition when a demand for them exists. All markets, however, are not Boston, and the wise poultryman, before entering upon any special branch of the industry, will study the markets in which his products are to be sold.

In some things one section of the country can not compete with another section, but it is not so in poultry. The New Englander can not grow corn in competition with the Illinois or Iowa farmer, but the Main or Massachusetts poultrymen can raise eggs and poultry for the local markets at a handsome profit without fear of Western competition, and vice versa.

Grit should always be provided. There are on the market a number of brands of good grit. None of them are expensive. Whatever brand is used, it should be hard and with good cutting or grinding edges. Oyster shells, though of use in furnishing lime for egg shells, do not make good grit, because they are not sufficiently hard. For the little chickens the grit should be small, and for the adult fowls that of a larger size should be provided.

In feeding the chickens there are many methods in respect to details, but all these methods may be reduced to two in a scheme of classification, the wet and the dry. The first is the older method, practiced by our forebears from the time "whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." Chicken dough has become a classical term in chicken rearing. The dough may be mixed with water or milk, and may be sloppy or almost dry so as to be crumbly. Sweet milk is excellent but somewhat expensive. Water will do, and boiling water is preferable to cold, provided always that the mixture is not fed hot but allowed to stand until it is merely warm. By the dry method, the foods are fed without being mixed with any liquid. Dry mashes and small grains are used. I have tried both methods with satisfactory results, though I lean towards the dry method as the more economical in time.

The instruction found in the columns of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is the best and most reliable that money can buy, and that the most practical and successful poultrymen of America can produce. The Journal is therefore a school for the amateur and a help to the expert, and neither can afford to be without it.

We want agents everywhere, and will pay liberally for good workers. Write us for terms.

For the year 1911, SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL guarantees an average monthly circulation of 30,000 copies.

SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL is a monthly magazine of national circulation and advertisers secure a profitable business from all sections. Changes of ads must be received not later than the 15th of the month, and new ads the 20th, in order to insure insertion in the month following.

SUBSCRIBERS GUARANTEED AGAINST LOSS.

It is the policy of SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL to accept advertisements from only thoroughly honorable poultrymen and business firms. Great care is taken in this respect. We therefore guarantee all our subscribers against loss through deliberate fraud on the part of any display advertiser in our columns. If by chance any subscriber should be swindled in this way we will make good his loss if within 30 days from the time of sending his order to the advertiser he will furnish proof that will enable us to convict the advertiser of intentional fraud, and provided the subscriber proves to us that when writing to the advertiser he stated that the ad was seen in SUCCESSFUL POULTRY JOURNAL.

Water is cheap and abundant. Fowls need it and should have what they need.

The fancier's and the farmer's fresh eggs are alike, with this difference, that the fancier's are always fresh and the farmer's sometimes are.

In breeding chickens the skeleton and its needs should not be overlooked. The food upon which they are grown should contain the constituents out of which bone is formed, if big, strong, productive fowls are expected.

Unavailable Contributions.

In the course of a year we receive many more contributions than we can possibly use and are therefore obliged to select some for publication and to reject others. And the principle upon which such selection must be made is expressed by the word "availablity." The rejection of a contribution does not necessarily mean that it is not a good one, that it lacks anything in thought or expression, or that it would not be gladly received and published at some other time or in some other place. It simply is unavailable.

A contribution may be unavailable because the subject has been recently discussed in these columns, and therefore would be but a repetition of ideas recently set forth in detail. Or it may be unavailable because in the same mail has arrived another article discussing the same topic more fully or more attractively. Or it may be unavailable because it is untimely, discussing in June a subject that ought to have been discussed in January, or treating upon a topic that has ceased to be of interest. Unavailability may also be due to the selection of a topic foreign to the purposes of the journal, valuable in itself and worthy of a prominent place in some other publication. Unavailability is a veritable Proteus, having a thousand forms, but in whatever form it appears uttering an imperative command to reject the contribution.

We are always reluctant to reject a worthy contribution because we feel that the writer will be sure to get a wrong impression of our action, but "necessity knows no law," and we are often compelled to do so. If we could sit down beside the writer and point out the features which compel us to reject his contribution, we feel certain that he would recognize the imperative necessity of our action. But, of course, this is not feasible, and we take this method to assure all our contributors that we prize their contributions and never reject one without careful consideration and without a sense of its unavailability for publication. Nor should the rejection of a contribution deter a writer from sending in other and further contributions. Because one contribution is rejected as unavailable, it does not follow that the next will be rejected for the same reason. We have no "blacklist" of contributors. Each contribution is accepted or rejected upon its own merits. All writers are treated alike in this respect. We have some contributors who, through experience as breeders and writers, have become favorably known to the poultry public, and whose contributions we are exceedingly glad to receive, but their articles stand upon the same footing as those of the veriest tyro with his first contribution, are weighed upon their merits, and are rejected when found unavailable. And some of the contributions of such writers we have rejected in the past, reluctantly, of course, but positively, because for some reason we found them unavailable, a course we shall be obliged to pursue in the future.

An occasional rejection of a contribution ought not to deter our writers from continuing in the praiseworthy work of attempting to assist their fellow breeders. We urge all of our readers to contribute to these columns. The beginner may have something of importance to say as well as the veteran. If any one has learned something helpful, or which he thinks will prove helpful, to his fellow breeders; if he has any word of inspiration to speak through which some discouraged one will be led to take fresh courage to renew the battle and turn defeat into victory, it is his duty, as it ought to be his privilege, to make known the discovery or to speak the helpful word. And because some one may have anticipated him and thus have rendered his attempt unavailable should not prevent him from making the attempt. We desire the hearty co-operation of our fellow workers in advancing the interests of the poultry industry, and shall make use of such help as they may bring if it be in any way available. Less than this we would not do if we could; more than this we could not do if we would; and we trust that all our contributors will receive this explanation of the situation in the kindly spirit in which it is given, and continue to do in the future, as they have done in the past, their share of the work in promoting the industry which we all desire to see advanced.

The Thoroughbred Hen.

This publication espouses the cause of the thoroughbred hen, because it believes, for various reasons, that the progress of the poultry industry depends upon the dissemination and general use of thoroughbred fowls. Though the common mongrel fowls are still more numerous than thoroughbred fowls, and in the census play an important part in rolling up the millions of value accredited to the poultry industry, yet it is a fact that within the last forty or fifty years, and particularly within the last twenty-five years, the poultry industry has made immense strides forward. And this immense progress is coincident with the introduction and use of thoroughbred fowls. A century ago the average production of eggs from hens in this country was from forty to sixty eggs a year and the average weight of the dressed fowls not far from three or three and one-half pounds. Compare these facts with the prolific laying and the heavy carcasses of to-day and note the increase.

We do not hold the barnyard fowl in contempt. She possesses many good qualities. But she possesses these excellent qualities in an undeveloped condition. They are rather promises and potencies than actual performances. The thoroughbred fowl possesses all these promises and potencies but in a developed form. And it is this development which makes the thoroughbred fowl superior to its undeveloped ancestors.

The superiority of the thoroughbred fowl is shown in its uniformity. The common barnyard fowl lacks uniformity, not only in appearance but in performance. One can never know what the chickens hatched from the eggs of such hens will be. They will vary in shape, size, color and adaptability for use. But with the chickens from thoroughbred fowls one can expect, not absolute, but a high degree of uniformity. One can predict with reasonable certainty the color, size, shape and prolificacy of the chickens, and can, therefore, conduct his business with greater assurance of what the profit and loss account will show.

This superiority is also shown in the fact that the thoroughbred fowl has been developed in certain definite directions. There are fowls noted for their great laying; others for their superb table qualities; still others for a happy combination of laying and table characteristics. And this enables the poultryman to engage in the branch of business for which he is best adapted and which for him will prove the most profitable. He can establish an egg-farm, and devote his energies mainly to the production of eggs for market; or he can rear fowls for the table, broiled, roasted and the like; or he may combine these purposes at his pleasure. And the thorouoghbred fowl will furnish him the materials with which to do his work successfully. Without such development in definite directions, the pursuing of a specific branch of the business would be impossible, and it is not too much to say that the thoroughbred fowl has made the egg-farm, the broiler establishment and the soft roaster business a possibility. And this is so, though some of these industries may not employ the thoroughbred fowl in its purity, though they may make use of cross-bred fowls and mix up two or more breeds in the conduct of their business. The cross-bred fowl cannot be made unless there are thoroughbreds to make it from.

This superiority is further shown by the fact that the industry has gained in public estimation through the use of thoroughbred fowls. It is a fact of vast moment to the poultry industry that the social status of the poultryman has been raised. Business doesn't conduct itself; it requires men. And men engage in business because it is attractive. The attraction may consist in its profits, and they will induce certain men to engage in it, irrespective of the estimation in which they will be held in society. But profits, if coupled with the loss of social status, will not attract the better classes of men. When poultry keeping came to be regarded as a worthy industry and the one engaged in it lost none of his social prestige, then it became a business to attract able men who even made it an exclusive pursuit.

The thoroughbred fowl has led to the establishment of specialty clubs and the great central organization, the American Poultry Association; it has caused the formation of many societies for the exhibition of fine fowls, and these exhibitions annually attract many thousands of people to study the progress made in poultry breeding; it has created a powerful section of literature devoted to the description of the various varieties and the science and art of breeding, which literature finds expression in millions of copies of journals as well as in many volumes of books, and gives employment to an army of men and editors, writers, illustrators, printers, clerks, bookkeepers and the like; and it has hastened the development of, if it has not entirely built up, the business of manufacturing and selling incubators, brooders and many other poultry appliances and supplies. All of which things have raised the social status of the poultryman to a higher plane and aided in the future development of the great industry.

When we contemplate the results achieved already through the partial dissemination of the thoroughbred hen, and when we look forward to the greater future opening before us for the poultry industry, we feel that we are more than justified in espousing the cause of the thoroughbred hen. However humble her origin, she represents in her development profound study and thought intelligently directed to worthy ends, and in her achievements proves that she is deserving of the study, thought and care bestowed upon her.

News Notes

Without entrance requirements one may now attend Iowa State College and take a thoroughgoing one year poultry course. This course has been arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for practical poultry work and have but one year to devote to study or who may not be able to furnish the requirements for admission to the regular four year college courses. The work will be given by the regular college instructors and will be as good in every particular as the work given the regular college classes. For further information write to Poultry Department, Iowa State Agricultural College, Ames, Ia.

Prof. F. H. Stoneburn, in charge of the Department of Poultry Husbandry, Connecticut Agricultural College, asks us to call attention to the summer poultry course at the College. He says, "Our Summer School poultry course has become decidedly popular, though the idea is but two years old. I expect that we will have the largest poultry class here this summer that has ever registered for this special work at this institution. Students have already enrolled, mostly business and professional people, as has been the case in the past. In anticipation of a heavy enrollment, we are planning to make the course this year especially attractive."

This matter is of special interest to our readers in the New England states. Full information regarding the Course may be obtained by writing to Prof. Stoneburn whose address is Storrs, Conn.

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.
A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.
A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Incubators & Brooders

PLANS FOR A FIRELESS BROODER.

Only during the late spring and summer it is advisable to attempt to brood chicks artificially without heat. Some forty years ago the theory was first advanced that chicks could be brooded artificially by confining the heat made by the little chicks bodies, but not until quite recently has this theory received general attention. The assertion has been made that chicks could be brooded by this method out of doors during the most severe winter weather, and some who have tried it have been successful. The process has hardly left the experimental stage far enough, however, and the attempt to use it on a large scale should not be made until it has been tried on a small scale first.

But the fireless brooder may be employed for secondary use for brooding in warm weather or in heated houses. It may be also used in emergency cases where the hen leaves the brood a little too soon, when the brooder becomes overcrowded, or when the brooder is wanted for another and younger flock, but where it is hardly time for the brood to take to the colony houses.

The principal object sought in building one of these brooders is to make all parts easily accessible for cleaning and for caring for the chicks, to confine the heat as much as possible and yet have a good supply of pure air, to have the hover adjustable and padded with plenty of heat-holding cloth, so the chicks may have something to press their backs up against as they do when brooded by the hen.

The brooder shown in the illustration is made in four different parts, each of which may be easily and quickly cleaned. The outside measurement of the box is 2x2½ feet. The height is eight inches. The floor is made to fit up in the box so that the four walls fit tightly on the floor of the brooder house. Where the walls of the box sit on the floor of the brooder it is too easily displaced and does not fit tight enough. Four holes are made in the corners of the box an inch apart and the top hole an inch from the top ledge of the wall. A peg fitted into one of the holes in each corner holds the hover at any height suited to the age of the chicks. There are also four large holes in the walls of the box, one in each corner an inch or an inch and a half in diameter for ventilation. These ventilators are made high enough so that the air must pass through the cloth of the hover before it can reach the chicks. In this way there is a continuous inflow of pure air without a draft. Tin slides may be made to fit over the ventilators so the supply of air may be regulated during exceedingly cold nights.

The hover shows two folds of cloth dropped down, but another fold or two may be added with good results. The cloth is dropped, too, in folds without being cut into long strips as is the usual case and this makes the retention of heat much easier. Woolen flannel is the best material to use. An old blanket is generally available. The top is made to fit down tightly on the box and may be roofed with tarred paper or tin if it is to be used outside during the summer. The brooder should not be used, though, out in the open, but a good smooth roof is provided more as a roosting board than anything else as the chicks soon take to it after they feather out well.

Department of Practical Poultry Feeding

FEEDING FOR QUICK GROWTH

Those who wish to use a modified system of the hopper feeding plan may use troughs like the illustration for this purpose. The feed for the fowls for the day is placed in a divided trough, mash in one end and mixed grain or cracked corn in the other. The daily allowance of the food so fed varies a little according to the season and the appetites of the birds.

Home-made feed trough that does not waste the food.

The daily allowance for twenty-five fowls supplied in this trough should be a little less than 3 pints of moist mash and about 2½ quarts of dry grain mixture. The birds should be fed rather liberally, as there is no profit made with fowls fed on a scant ration. Just enough should be fed though so that there is rarely any feed left in the trough at night.

This method of feeding is especially well adapted to the needs of the large poultry farmers where the main object is to make the youngsters grow to a marketable age as quickly as possible and with the least attention. Then where egg farming is carried on and the hens are kept out over the fields and grouped in colonies of 35 to 50 this is an ideal way, supplying them with plenty of food without making the feeding place a drawing card for rats during the night, as the fowls clean the feed up before night. When the trip is made around the farm with a one-horse wagon in the morning to feed and water, the attendant can keep in touch with the entire flock, as they will not go out to range until they have been fed.

In the Little Compton district in southeastern Rhode Island where the Rhode Island Red was originated and made famous for this reason, the poultry farms generally use the trough system. This section of Rhode Island is noted for the great numbers of chickens raised and the practical poultrymen. Here men make the rearing of poultry a life study and make it a specialty just as sheep and cattle raising is made a specialty in many sections. The "one-man plants," as they are called, clear from $1,000 to $1,500 per year on their forty and fifty acre farms by egg farming and broiler raising. The product of these farms is shipped to Boston, Providence and New York principally. The Rhode Island Red fowl was originated by these farmers by a process of selecting the fowls each year which were best suited to their practical needs as egg layers and market fowls as well. This accounts for the widespread popularity of the Reds.

The daily mash fed on these plants varies some according to the season but generally consists of about half and half bran and chop feed (cracked corn and oats ground together) cooked until the corn is thoroughly done and then about ten or twelve per cent beef scrap is added before feeding. During the winter cut steamed clover is mixed with the mash in about equal quantities.

The mixed grain is usually a mixture of cracked corn, whole corn wheat and oats, the mixture being about 50 per cent corn in the summer season and a considerably larger percentage during the winter season. After the chicks are old enough to eat mash they are fed the same feed as the adult stock as much time is saved which it would otherwise take in preparing additional food. Fish waste is fed quite extensively on these poultry farms in the spring to supplement the high priced beef scraps. Fresh fish waste can generally be obtained for twenty-five cents a barrel. The fish waste is well cooked before it is fed and care taken not to feed too much to the laying stock as the fish taints the eggs. It is fed in abundance to the growing stock though.

When one man cares for from 2,000 to 4,000 fowls each day the farm must necessarily be laid off to the best possible advantage that all the fields may be easily and quickly reached and the feeding done with expedience. All feeding and water appliances must be simple, easily used and cleaned.

The feeding troughs vary in size, but on an average are three and a half feet long by fourteen inches wide. Four upright posts on one-inch square stuff twelve inches long form the corners and legs. The bottom of the trough is made of smooth board notched at the corners to receive the posts which serve as a frame as well as legs. The bottom board is nailed to the posts about four inches from the lower ends. On each side is nailed a piece three inches wide by three and a half feet long, giving a depth of about two inches to the trough. On each end is nailed a piece of board six inches high and fourteen inches wide which serves to form the end of the trough and support the removable top board. The top board or cover is of heavy inch stuff ten inches long, so that it will form a movable cover that is not easily shaken or jarred out of position. The whole makes a practical feeding device which keeps the food clean and prevents waste. There is little more than a three-inch clear open space for the feeding fowls between the top of the sides of the trough and the cover or lid.

Prevention and Cure of Disease

KEEPING FOWLS HEALTHY.

The great secret of success in poultry raising is to keep the birds in a healthy condition. Many persons give up in their efforts to raise poultry on account of some disastrous experience in failing to preserve the health of the fowls. A very successful poultry raiser, talking to the writer, gave the following as his method of keeping disease at a distance.

In cleaning out his poultry house he never throws the manure out into the runs where the fowls are, as it may contain lice, eggs of lice, or disease germs of various kinds. He has it hauled to the barnyard where it is mixed with the manure from the stables, all of which is under cover. In due time the manure from the henhouse reaches the fields. This cleaning out of the hen houses takes place about twice a week, and thus no encouragement is given to the lice that might possibly breed in the dry manure.

The second important step in the preservation of the health of the fowls is to keep the lice and mites away. So successful had this man been in doing this that for a period of three years he was unable to find a louse or a mite on any of his fowls. Then his hens got into his neighbor's yard, mingled with the fowls there, and brought home both lice and mites. Since that time he has not been able to free his premises from them. He consoles himself, however, with the thought that if the hens had not captured the vermin the birds and rats would have brought them in finally. This man inspects his fowls for lice every few days. The inspection of one fowl or several does not prove anything, as the lice may all go onto one bird. Last fall he had inspected nearly all the fowls and found no lice. But one of old fellow was missed each time. When he finally was corralled and subjected to inspection he was found to be covered with lice.

The owner promptly gave him the same treatment that he does his show birds when he washes them for the show room, and he claims that such treatment will exterminate both lice and mites. He made a thick soap solution by cutting up some toilet soap and letting it boil in water on the stove until it was dissolved. Then he took a brush and rubbed this into the feathers of the bird till he was covered with the white lather. Then he dipped him in a thinner solution of soap and water and washed him clean. He gives all of his birds suspected of having lice the same treatment. Of course all this takes considerable time but frees them from lice and makes the birds able to keep in good health.

Unusual exposure in winter is one cause of losses that can be eliminated. It is not so much the cold that is to be dreaded as cold and dampness can be kept out even if the cold cannot be. The health of fowls suffer more in wet spells in winter than in dry and very cold periods.

ONE OF THE CAUSES OF DEATH AMONG THE CHICKS.

So much has been said and written on this subject that it seems, at first glance at least, almost impossible to advance anything new as a panacea for the ills complained of, and yet in spite of all that has been put forward by the most learned in poultry culture the fact remains that chicks do die and at such a rate that statisticians tell us not more than fifty per cent of those hatched, ever reach maturity.

Now, that this abnormal rate of mortality ought not to continue goes without saying, and as surely as the man who makes two blades of grass to grow where one only grew before is a public benefactor, so surely is he who can suggest any means by which such a death rate can be materially reduced thereby proportionally increasing the number of those that shall gain maturity equally entitled to the appellation.

While many of these little chicks succumb from causes which possibly can scracely be avoided, yet, we believe that a considerable number are sacrificed by causes altogether preventable. Many of these have been dealt with time and again by some of our ablest professionals in a more efficient way than an amateur can ever hope to do. Yet there is one reason for this large percentage of infant mortality in the poultry world that I think has not received such consideration as it deserves, hence, to this one I shall call special attention, and in doing so, may say at once, that some writers in the poultry press especially during late years are not altogether free from blame.

For instance in almost all utility articles the thousands of readers have been urged that if they would make their poultry pay them the maximum profit at a minimum cost they must hatch their chicks in time to get them to laying maturity by October or at latest Nov. 1st; sell off at once all the previous year's breeders. Keep the pullets laying at least 30 to 40 per cent in the two months named, 50 per cent in Dec., 60 in Febr. and 70 to 80 in March and April.

The result of this practice is simply inevitable. While you may congratulate yourself on having secured the largest possible number of eggs during the period when the prices ranged from 30 to 60 cents per dozen, you will have to mourn over the fact of having also succeeded in weakening the fertility of the egg and destroying the vitality of the chick to such an extent as to make it almost impossible (owing to its increased susceptibility to the various ailments to which chicks are heir) to survive the days of chickhood. You cannot eat your cake and have it. What is the remedy for this? Do not attempt to hatch chicks from pullets that have already been laying 5 months before the season commences. Keep as many of your previous year's stock as will supply you with what eggs you require during the hatching season, treat them well during their moult but do not hurry them, let them enjoy a well earned rest, and they will more than repay whatever care you may bestow on them. This is no mere theory with me, but the result of experiments carried along these lines for at least 3 years, and this year's experience promises to be most unique as up to the present the whole of the mortality is among those hatched from pullets' eggs, not having lost a single chick hatched from one and two year old hen's eggs. All my chicks (whether in the brooder or with the hen) are fed on the same food (dry grain) and receive the same care and attention, and am thoroughly satisfied that in order to reduce the present abnormal death rate among little chicks, we must avoid as far as possible hatching them from pullets that have been rushed to laying maturity and confine more exclusively our operations to the use of older birds, these being themselves healthy and mated to strong healthy cockerels will produce offspring with stamina sufficient to enable them to battle successfully with the ills to which they are subject, and will also cause you at the close of each season to look with more pleasure and satisfaction at your work, and a great deal more profit.

William Cook and Sons will give "advice free," but their Orpingtons cost and are worth money.

Fleck Bros. don't breed flecked but pencilled Wyandottes.

The Go-Well Rocks ought to go well after this send-off.

It is fairly fitting that Fox should breed Buff Orpingtons; if these had been Red Orpingtons it would have been even fitter; Red Fox Orpingtons would sound well.

When Lester Tompkins' Reds made a clean sweep at Madison Square, they didn't sweep up the building, but swept up the prizes.

The best bargain in books still is 999 Questions and Answers. Note the name and price and send for it. Hope this will get by the editor's blue pencil.

Ode L. Rankin says the best ode yet written is his "Best in the West" Barred Rocks. Sing on until they rank in the East as well as the West as the handsomest and the best, despite the claims of the rest.

Archimedes only wanted a fulcrum for his lever to lift the world. Thomas R. Levers believes he can supply that want with his White Wyandottes.

We imagine that Mrs. S. C. Bridgewater, with a credit of 11 silver cups and 38 special ribbons, would like you to get the best and forget the rest.

Fenton Farms, in a superior strain, tell of the merits and virtues of their Columbian Wyandottes, which can give Hail Columbia to many another variety.

Milton W. Brown would not have you stampeded, but if you must be, then be stampeded toward the Black Orpington. It's a white bird if it is black; in other words, it is the white blackbird among fowls.

Although Ernest Kellerstrass made $18,178.53 net profit in one year selling chickens, he is still doing business at the old stand. He has not retired—indeed, he is not of the retiring sort; neither are his Orpingtons.

The Plymouth Rock Squab Co. must be a great consumer with its "Wanted, 5000 Squabs Daily." After all, it's not the company but a commission firm with this great want.

Petersen's Houdans have the others hoodooed.

The advertising columns fairly bristle with news, and there's no suspicion of a porcine nature about them. If one would keep posted he must read advertisements. Like reading the dictionary, it is full of interest and profit, specially profit.

L. A. Banta evidently believes in "nature's mating time." The idea of a natural breeding season is not entirely outgrown.

It is a good idea to provide for "The Beginner's Class." We were all beginners once and some of us have not been promoted very far.

"The Lesson of the Types" suggests that types teach important lessons, not the least important of which is that none of us live or die unto ourselves, but we are all bound by an indissoluble bond.

If food produces the wonderful effects which H. S. Babcock's article shows, we ought to be careful what we eat. It is a pretty good idea to be so, anyway.

COLOR OF NEWLY HATCHED AND YOUNG CHICKENS.

The beginner at poultry keeping who may have purchased sittings of eggs of some of the various breeds of fowl, is often ignorant as to the correct color of the newly hatched chicks. He is apt, for instance, to think that Minorcas and other black fowls should, as a matter of course, be black, when they come out of the shell ;and when he sees some white on the little birds he assumes that the eggs were not such as they were stated to be. A few particulars as to the appearance of some of the chicks when just hatched may therefore prove of use.

The various Buff breeds, which at present are so much in favor are yellow as chicks. The legs of Buff Wyandottes, Buff Plymouth Rocks and Buff Leghorns are yellow without buff. Those of Buff Orpingtons should be white, with four toes, but many of the chicks come with yellow, fluffy legs and some with five toes. As Buff chickens get older they change color a good deal, some coming light and some red and dark. The delicate shade is readily acted upon by sunshine, and the chickens often lose color after being exposed to heavy rain, followed by hot sun. Barred Plymouth Rock chicks are dark, sooty brown, with a light grey spot on the back of the head. As they fledge it is no uncommon thing for one or two black chickens to be noticed in the brood; these make many beginners imagine that the eggs were from inferior parents.

Brown Leghorn chickens are clearly marked along the back with dark brown on a lighter brown ground. Black red Game are much like the brown Leghorn, except that the latter have yellow legs. Indian Game also have almost the same markings, but some of the chicks in a brood will be a good deal lighter than others. The Indian Game feather slowly, becoming rather bare and naked in the process, particularly about the shoulders. Houdans in their early infancy are black on the upper parts and yellowish white underneath. Dark Brahmas are brown on the upper part of the body, with clear and distinct stripes on the back, and light brown underneath. The legs are yellow and fluffy. Light Brahmas and white Cochins closely resemble one another when first hatched. They are both yellowish white in color with yellow legs covered with fluff. But on close examination the combs of the Brahmas will be seen to be triple, while those of the Cochins are single.

Black Hamburghs, like the chicks of most other black fowls, are black on the head and upper parts, with the throat, breast and under parts, whitish. As a rule the black Hamburgh chicks that have the most black about them, will turn out to be the best colored birds; the white does not disappear for some weeks. Colored Dorking chicks are light brown, with darker rich brown stripes along the back. If they are dark brown all over when they come out of the shell they will feather too darkly as they grow up.

As the chickens of the various breeds grow up different strains will be found to feather in different style and it requires a good deal of experience to form any accurate opinion as to the future appearance of the birds. For this reason the novice should not be too ready to discard any chicks which display what at first appears to be wrong color in some parts.

SHOULD SELLERS GUARANTEE RESULTS FROM EGGS?

Just as long as people choose to gamble on the results to be gotten from eggs for hatching, usually bought at a fair price, it would seem that a breeder is justified in accepting the orders upon the conditions, however, that the purchaser is to assume the risk in each case. What buyers of eggs for hatching want nowadays for the nominal price of from $1 to $5 per, is that you not only furnish the eggs after everything possible has been done to insure their fertility, but they are also unthinkingly selfish

White Orpingtons Some choice young stock left. Will be ready for egg trade Feb. 15th. Write me Selling out my Barred Rocks at a Bargain in demanding a positive guarantee that such and such a per cent of the eggs will hatch, and hatch live vigorous chicks.

If a man could gently pull aside the curtain hiding the future and see just how the expressman is going to handle those eggs and what degree of complacency the old hen is going to maintain while she "does the rest," then alone could we breeders say with frank and open conviction: "Here take your eggs. I will guarantee the results." Many amateurs and again a certain class who have undoubtedly cut their "eye-teeth" in poultry experience, frequently resort to some argument of the above nature to promote an increase in orders, so strenuous has become the force of competition upon them.

But as a general thing, we find the buyer of the eggs usually realizes a pretty good thing out of his investment, and in many cases fanciers selling eggs at a comparatively high price, $3 to $5 for instance, give the buyers the best end of the deal by a large majority. Does he not for a normal sum give people an opportunity to hatch chicks perhaps equal in quality to the best even he himself will be able to realize from his matings? It is all right for breeders to adopt a liberal policy in dealing with egg customers, but at the same time there are evidently two sides to this question. And it all depends upon which side you are on what stand you will take on it, isn't that true?

In this day and age, a breeder usually puts a reasonably low valuation upon his fancy eggs purposely so that the hatcher of them may realize a good enough profit for the chances he takes, which does not amount to much if a breeder consults his own dear interests in shipping selected eggs. The buyer pays for his setting and takes the chances, or if he doesn't he ought to. If he gets five or six chicks he certainly gets his money's worth, even if the cat puts two of them out of business the very next day and the rest grow up with out being a disgrace to the back yard. If a man raises chicks from eggs costing $2 per setting which are worth $1 each at maturity, then he has made a No. 1 investment whether he admits the stern fact or not. Frequently a setting of eggs will produce a single bird worth, say ten times the cost of the eggs in the first place. It is a pretty sure thing that a fancier in the habit of guaranteeing hatches generally has a hot time making good his guarantee, and then not without making an occasional enemy. Take our advice, go ahead and sell your eggs, do your part by sending fertile eggs, well packed, and do not guarantee anything. In this case the buyer understands that he assumes a part of the risk and is content with the results. We have no objection to duplicating orders when it is clearly a case of bad luck, but it should not be an expressed condition of the sale. Whatever is done in the matter in the way of duplicating eggs or refunding money should be entirely a matter of courtesy and not of compulsion.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

As the weather warms up the conditions are more favorable for lice and red mites and the poultry keeper must be prepared to prevent them getting a foothold in his flocks if profit from them is his object. Neglect is all that is necessary to allow lice and mites to eat up the greater part of the profits from any flock. I give my setting hens five or six thorough dustings with Lambert's Death to Lice before I place them in the brood coops with their chickens, and as several days elapse between each application of the powder, by the time they are given a brood of chickens they are about as free from lice as it is possible to have them, and the chickens are practically free from the pests all summer. For red mites prevention is a hundred times better than cure, so I sprinkle the floor and sides of the brood coops with kerosene oil each time I clean them out and they never appear in them.

The breeding hens and laying stock should also be carefully dusted a few times at once, if it has not been already attended to, for with the coming warm weather lice will increase rapidly and make it much harder work to keep them down than if the matter is attended to early. The next boxes should be sprinkled with kerosene oil and the nest material renewed occasionally and an application of the oil given the roosts also to prevent the red mite getting a foothold in the flock. Don't say, oh, that's too much fuss and bother; it isn't half the bother that it will be if you once get a good live lot of lice and red mites well under breeding headway in your poultry houses and coops, and the expense is not to be considered when compared to the losses many flocks suffer every year from these pests where preventive measures are not applied.

Keep the old fowls separated from the young chickens if you want the chicks to make a rapid growth. The later chicks will also do much better if they are fed separately from the early ones.

Bread crumbs moistened in milk, hard boiled eggs, chopped fine, and cottage cheese and oatmeal are the principal foods for newly hatched chicks.

Fence the garden with poultry netting and give the young chicks free range. It is seldom good results are obtained from yarded young stock.

Grow some long red mangels this year for the chickens' green food next winter. They are more than relished by the fowls then when they have access to no other green food for four or five months. Green food is an aid in preserving their health, and aids egg production in winter too. Don't slight it.

If a hen with scaly legs is running with a brood of chickens the entire brood will have scaly legs in the fall. Drop a few drops of kerosene oil on her legs so the oil reaches all the rough places and a couple of applications will cure the most of such cases and prevent future trouble with the chicks.

Brood coops should be looked over carefully to see they have tight roofs which will protect the broods from rain. The roofing papers now on the market leave no excuse for a poultry keeper to house his chicks in leaky coops. A little attention early prevents loss later.

V. D. Caneday.

POULTRY KEEPING IN THE SOUTH.

"If I had known." Well, you might have known, for most of the writers for a majority of the poultry publications have not ceased to warn the people almost night and day for a quarter of a century to watch for a shortage both in stock and eggs, which would mean higher prices all along the line, but most of the readers of poultry journals and kindred literature thought that the writers were a set of "cranks" and did not know what they were talking about. Many of the articles did seem a little bit extravagant and doubtless did cause many to embark in the poultry business and make complete failures but there are thousands of fancy and utility raisers of poultry in the United States today who are making a good living with their chickens alone, and why not? Right here in the south farmers are getting twenty-five cents per dozen for eggs and nine cents per pound for hens and this at their door. They do not have to carry them off of the farm. Nine-tenths of our farmers are using thoroughbred males and this means a good demand for all of the surplus males that the fanciers can produce. Twenty years ago the farmer of this section would laugh you to scorn if you asked him one dollar for a "rooster," but hundreds of them today pay from $3.00 to $5.00 for a cockerel without a murmer. The truth of the matter is, many of our progressive farmers are raising nothing but "pure breds," as they term it, and, by the way, you had better watch them too when you go to the show or they will get the "blue ribbon." It is marvelous indeed to see such enthusiasm manifested in the raising of thoroughbred poultry in the south. The one great thing in favor of this industry is the climate. The fowls can run at large nearly every day in the year. The greatest drawback is lice and mites. These pests have to be fought with a vim or they will ruin all of your plans. We are away behind our northern brethren in many respects. In the first place we get lazy, and it seems that our birds catch the same disease, possibly both man and his birds are affected with the "hook worm." All we need now is for our northern brethren to come down and show us and our chickens how to "hustle," The writer has been trying with both tongue and pen for a quarter of a century to get his people to discard the mongrel fowl and he has lived to see most of them relegated to the past. The part we have played in this matter has been for more and better poultry and for love for the fancy rather than for the money there was in it.

DRINKING FOUNTAIN FOR CHICKS AND FOWLS.

It is important that the little chicks have plenty of pure fresh drinking water at all times. It is not always easy to provide it, however, especially when the chicks are supplied water in the ordinary way—from a shallow saucer or tin pan. The saucer of clean water becomes dirt ladened in a very few moments as the chickens play about in it. If filthy drinking water is allowed to remain before the chicks any length of time they will invariably fall a prey to some of the ailments to which they are subject while young.

Tin can drinking fountain for fowls.

Drinking vessels should be thoroughly cleaned once a day and scalded at least once a week with a little soda added to the water. Galvanized tin or earthenware vessels are the best. The larger the vessel, especially for adult fowls, the better—the water remains cool much longer. In warm weather the drinking vessel should be set in a cool, shady place and never where the direct rays of the sun fall upon it. The water in the little chicks' vessels should be changed four or five times a day and in that of the adult fowls at least twice a day during the summer months.

Instead of using an open saucer or pan for a watering vessel a water fountain can be provided at small cost. Gallon and two-gallon containers are the best sizes for adult fowls. A very satisfactory inverted fountain for the little chicks can be made from a tomato can by punching a few holes around the edge of the can near the top and after filling it and inverting the saucer over it, quickly turning it up with the saucer underneath as shown in the illustration. Only a small amount of water is in view in the saucer at one time and yet as it is used up the saucer is continuously refilled to the top of the holes in the tin can.

Another very simple way of making a drinking fountain for the little chicks which have a fondness for getting into the water with their feet is by taking a pound baking powder or chocolate or any other large can with lid fitting down over the can and push or dent in one side as shown in the illustration. The can is filled with water, the lid placed over it and the can inverted.

BREAKING UP BROODY HENS.

Many hens at this time of the year insist upon following their instinct for sitting and the egg yield decreases accordingly. Owners of flocks of the Mediterranean class—Leghorns and Tying a broody hen with string attached to leather band around the leg.

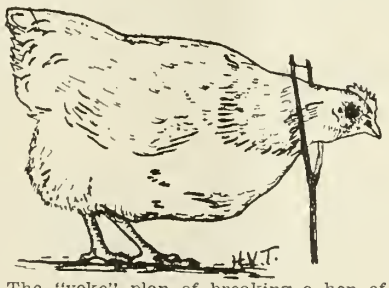
Minorcas—will not be annoyed so much by the sitting hen, but all the heavier varieties in which the sitting instinct has not been bred out, attempt to sit after each clutch of eggs has been laid. Some of the meat breeds—the Brahmas, Cochins and



The "yoke" plan of breaking a hen of sitting.

Langshans—insist so persistently in sitting that it is often a hard matter to break them up even when confined in an empty crate or box.

There are several other ways of breaking up the sitting hen besides the ordinary method of cooping them up in a box. One unique method is to make a yoke out of a small forked sappling similar to the yoke used on fence breaking cattle. With this yoke about her neck the hen cannot remain on the nest with any degree of comfort, but she can manage to eat.

A hen that is very persistent in sitting may be tied out under a tree with a soft cord for two or three days where she cannot find anything to roost or sit upon except the ground. Care should be taken to use something soft to attach to the leg. A leather band, as shown in the illustration herewith is very satisfactory.

Where there are a great many sitting hens to break up, a double compartment fowl shipping coop hung from the roof of a shed or from the limb of a tree in the poultry run and the broody hens confined in it, will break them up quicker than any other method. The broody hen will often attempt to sit in the dark corner of the ordinary stationary crate, but as the hen moves about in the crate hung from a wire it swings, causing the hen to think—if such the hen can do—more about keeping her balance than of sitting. Water should be given the broody hens, together with a scant supply of food during the two or three days of their confinement.

This coop breaks the hen of sitting and does it in a humane way and in a much shorter time than other methods.

Success means improvement from year to year, Success, like wealth, is a relative term, but its invariable constituent is improvement. The man, whose flocks show an annual improvement, even though he finds himself far behind some of his competitors, is a successful breeder.

Column of Smiles

Boarder (attempting to carve the duck)—Did I understand you to say, madam, that this was a canvasback duck

Landlady—Yes, that is what I said; do you doubt my word?

Boarder—Not at all; I would not have doubted your word had you said it was a leatherback duck.

At some time or other every man has looked upon a hen as a stupid fowl, and some time or other has been set back by seeing her dodge brickbats as long as he could throw.

* * *

"I see by the papers," remarked the old hen
To her cluster of down covered rovers,
"That they boast of a Mr. Delmonico, who,
Last evening, 'laid ninety covers.'
That's a pretty good lay in a night, to be sure,
But I'll warrant the whole season through
That 'tis not only two hundred covers I've laid,
But I've laid the ingredients, too."

The hens are in the flower beds,
One, two, three,
And every one as busy
As a hen can be.
If I had a hired man
Would work like this,
Farming would be holiday,
And life all bliss.

Said the old, exclusively corn-fed hen, "I wonder why the boss don't try a mash on me?"

* * *

In making "curried chicken" do they use a curry-comb? No, they use a cock's comb.

To make a hen lay, hit her a solid blow on the head with a baseball bat. She will then lay anywhere. This, grammatically speaking, is a lie.

She laid the still white form beside those which had gone before; no sob, no sigh forced its way from her heart, throbbing as though it would burst. Suddenly a cry broke the stillness of the place—one single heart-breaking shriek; then silence; another cry; more silence; then all silent but for a guttural murmur, which seemed to well up from her very soul. She left the place. She would lay another egg tomorrow.

* * *

The boys were trying to have an illustrated fable. The characters of the cock and the dog were readily taken, but no one seemed to be willing to take that of the ass. "I'll take the character," said a poultry breeder, "for I have just paid sixty dollars for a dozen eggs and feel thoroughly qualified to enact the part of an ass." The eggs didn't hatch.

IS CAPONIZING PROFITABLE.

Do you raise capons? If not, why not? This is the season of the year to take up this proposition, and so get in line for your share of capon profits.

Capons are easy to make, easy to raise and easy to sell for the high money. There may not be a market for old male birds, but there is always a market for capons and at figures that will do you good. If your stock is of the ordinary barnyard variety you can make your surplus male birds, all legs and crop, into silent, succulent capons. If you raise thoroughbreds it pays to make the culls into capons and thus avoid cheapening your stock.

If you will send a postal to Geo. P. Pilling & Sons Co., 23rd and Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., they will send you a book telling you how to make, care for and market capons. Write them today.

WHITE ORPINGTONS THAT ARE WHITE.

M. B. Dolson, Geneva, Iowa, has been in the poultry business just a little over forty years. Ought to be long enough for a man to learn a few things about poultry. For more than five years he has been breeding White Orpingtons and finds them one of the best fancy and utility fowls on the market. He has experimented with nearly every leading strain of White Orpingtons, and now with the very best imported stock as a foundation, he is offering to the public his own strain, "Dolson's Snowflake White Orpingtons." Year after year he has picked out none but the whitest and largest birds for breeders and he now offers eggs from birds that are not only absolutely pure white, but possess that low-down, blocky characteristic so sought after by Orpington breedres. It will pay you to write Messrs. Dolson & Son, Dept. S, Geneva, Iowa, for their descriptive circular.

BARGAIN SALE RINGLET BARRED ROCKS.

E. B. Thompson, Box 355, Amenia, N. Y., is now offering for sale hundreds of his choicest birds at bargain prices. The Ringlet strain of Barred Rocks is known all over the world and has no superior. Extended comment on their quality and unbeaten show record is unnecessary. Every read of S. P. J. who is interested in Barred Rocks should carefully read Mr. Thompson's ad on the last cover page of this issue and then send for the bargain list which he is mailing to all applicants. This is a real opportunity to get the best at small cost and at prices far below its true value.

A WHITE DIARRHOEA REMEDY THAT HAS MADE GOOD.

The Cheviot Supply Co. of Cincinnati are elated over the universally good reports that are coming in from users of their Prescription No. 3. From all over the country people who have used the remedy are ordering more. One great poultry farm that lost hundreds of chicks from white diarrhoea last year did not lose a single chicks this year, because they used No. 3 right from the first and not a single chick failed to respond at once to the treatment. Here is what J. C. Fishel, the great White Wyandotte specialist writes:

Hope, Ind., May 9, 1911.
Cheviot Poultry Supply Co., Cincinnati, O.
Dear Sirs: The three small boxes of No. 3 Diarrhoea Cure came in all right. I must say you have sure got one of the best things for that. It seems to do the work if used as directed. Send us three dozen boxes at once.
J. C. Fishel & Sons.

Such letters as this coming from many of the world's foremost fanciers cause the promoters to feel like backing No. 3 to the limit. Any of our readers who have not tried the remedy should send 25 cents for 100 tablets with the understanding that if not satisfactory, the empty box may be returned and the full purchase price refunded.

STAIR'S BLACK ORPINGTONS.

Many expert breeders of Black Orpingtons would not believe it possible to produce birds so true to type, color and shape as are those in the pens of the James H. Stair Poultry Yards, Akron, Ohio, unless the birds have actually been seen. Early in life Mr. Stair learned that "there is no excellence without great labor," and he has applied this maxim to the rearing, mating and breeding of his fowls until his winnings have been phenomenal.

He has a most excellent show record which is sufficient evidence that this year's product from his carefully selected pens will produce for the purchaser of Mr. Stair's eggs, birds equal to his own; an opportunity of such real value that it cannot be overestimated by prospective buyers.

Special attention is given by Mr. Stair to the cleanliness of his pens and yards. The vigor of each bird is wonderful, and such precautions are taken that the fertility of the eggs is, without doubt, the highest obtainable.

All of his prize-winners at leading shows are in Mr. Stair's breeding pens and are mated for best results.

He is now selling eggs at half price and states that orders should be sent in promptly as the supply is limited.

Mr. Stair wishes it thoroughly understood that if a setting from any specified pen is requested, eggs from that pen only will be furnished, as no substitutions are countenanced. In placing your order with him you can's go wrong. Address Jas. H. Stair Poultry Yards, Akron, Ohio.

Mrs. R. C. Coomer, Speedwell, Ky., is breeding Rhode Island Reds of America's foremost strains and has a large quantity of surplus stock for sale at the present time at bargain prices. She is also selling eggs from her choicest breeding birds at very low prices. S. P. J. readers who are looking for quality at reasonable prices should write to Mrs. Coomer.

THE ROOFING PAINT PROBLEM.

When you bought a ready roofing, how would you like to have the dealer guarantee to keep it painted for ten years without further charges? That would seem like a good proposition, wouldn't it? You can obtain practically the same bargain by buying Amatite, the new-style no-paint roofing.

Amatite has a mineral surface consisting of stone particles embedded in a tough plastic matrix of pitch. It is a thoroughly practical proposition. It lasts as long or longer than the painted roofings when same are carefully maintained with paint, and it does this without any care or expense. Nobody should consider the purchase of roofings nowadays without finding out all about the new type of roofing. Information is very easy to obtain, because the manufacturers are naturally more than willing to tell you all about it. Simply address a postal request for a free sample of Amatite to the nearest office of the manufacturers, The Barrett Manufacturing Company, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Minneapolis, New Orleans, Seattle.

"Oculum" appears to be the long needed remedy for cases of liver and bowel trouble heretofore regarded as incurable. Have tried it also with satisfactory results upon a few cases of baby chicks "incurables" which bid fair to fully recover.
Yours truly,
Bradley Bros.

Lime Rock, Conn., March 14, 1911.
We will make affidavit that Oculum has performed miracles for us, and see no reason why it should not for everyone else. Our first prize Black Orpington pen, which won at Madison Square Garden in the show this winter, were in bad shape when we took them out of the coops in New York, and we did not expect they would be placed. I held them and Mr. Hubbard injected each with Oculum. The result was almost instantaneous, and the next day we were awarded the blue ribbon. This is a fact not only known by ourselves but our many friends saw us use the medicine.

Questions Answered

In this department each month questions will be answered that are asked by readers. When writing for information please give all details in full or an an intelligent answer cannot always be given. No portion of your letter will be published if the mere statement of the question will answer the purpose. As there are oftentimes good reasons why inquirers do not wish their identity known, we will not publish names, initials or location. Questions are answered by experts in the various branches of poultry raising. Adress all inquiries to Successful Poultry Journal, 355 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Question—Can fancy eggs for hatching be packed in any way that will secure safe transportation by mail?

Answer—They might reach their destination unbroken, but they would be handled to roughly en route to insure a good hatch.

Question—In treating fowls for lice by putting coal oil on the plumage, is there any danger of injuring the fowls?

Answer—Too much oil applied to the plumage will make a bird ill, and if it is not in good condition may kill it.

Question—What is the recipe for a good liquid lice killer?

Answer—Put one pound of naphthaline flake into a gallon of kerosene. See that the flakes are thoroughly dissolved before using.

Question—How often and for how long at a time may a setting hen leave the nest without injuring the eggs.

Answer—It all depends upon the location of the nest as affected by the weather. In moderately cool weather ten to twenty minutes each day is sufficient to both hen and eggs. In real warm weather a half hour occasionally will do no harm.

Question—What causes red spots resembling blood clots, in eggs?

Answer—Oftentimes a hen for various reasons will be forced to lay under a strain sufficient to burst one or more of the minute blood vessels in the egg organs or passages and the blood thus liberated comes in contact with and adheres to the egg and the shell is then formed over it. Eggs containing blood clots are generally from over-fat hens.

Question—Why are the yolks of some eggs light yellow and others dark yellow?

Answer—It is caused largely by the food. An ample supply of green food, particularly grass, gives the yolk a richer color.

Question—Can too much raw meat be fed to fowls?

Answer—Yes. Severe indigestion and worms are two of the evils attributed to overfeeding of meat.

Question—Is it necessary to allow shipped eggs to stand twenty-four hours before setting them?

Answer—No. This plan is sometimes advocated on the ground that the eggs should remain quiet for that length of time in or for the germ to assume its normal position. It will do this almost instantly.

Question—What is the recipe for Johnny cake so often recommended for feeding young chicks?

Answer—One part ground oats, one part wheat bran, one part corn meal. Mix with skim milk, sour milk or butter milk and bake it. A little ground charcoal may be added and it may also be slightly seasoned with salt.

Question—Of what value are nest eggs?

Answer—They are of doubtful value. If nest eggs are used at all they should be the ordinary china eggs. Real eggs remaining in the nest may be the means of starting the egg-eating habit; they may get broken and soil the nest, which is objectionable for other reasons than filth, and they may, after becoming old, be taken from the nest as fresh eggs and find their way to the cook or the table.

Question—What is the cause, prevention and cure of gapes?

Answer—The best thing to do is to adopt preventive measures, by confining all the affected chicks where they cannot mingle with the remainder of the flock. This disease is scattered by the fowls coming in contact with the worms that have been coughed up by the afflicted chicks and that have found lodgment in feeding and drinking vessels or on the ground itself. The primary cause is often the eating of angle worms, although in some localities these worms do not affect the chicks. The runs and houses in which the chicks have been confined should be well cleaned and disinfected with a 5 per cent solution of flicted birds take a feather, strij off the web to within an inch of the end, and moisten it well with oil of turpentine. Hold the chick firmly in the hand, force the mouth open and when the windpipe is open for breathing insert the feather, giving it a quick turn and removing it carbolic acid. For treatment of the afpromptly. Two or three applications of this will bring the chicks around all right. A good internal treatment is two or three feeds of garlic mixed with soft feed in a proportion of one good-sized bulb of garlic to about ten chicks. Camphor in the form of pills is also a good remedy, a dose being one-half to one grain twice a day.

Question—Do you know of anything that will stop chickens from eating and picking the feathers from each other? I feed meat, cut grass,, potatoes, cabbage, wheat, oats, middlings, but still they will eat the feathers. They are Brown Leghorns. What is the cause?

Answer—Sometimes it is impossible to cure confirmed cases of feather eating. Try removing the cause, and if this does not remedy the matter it would be better for you to dispose of the birds that have contracted the habit. Oftentimes it is caused by idleness, in which case the fowls begin picking at each other till blood appears where the feathers have beeen removed, and this develops their appetite along these lines. Any kind of an injury to one or more birds which causes bleeding may start the habit. Remove from the pens all birds that have the habit, as well as those that have lost feathers in this way. Pen them separately for a whole and then return them to the pens.

Question—What causes the skin of chicks to puff up in places and fill with air, and how should the trouble be treated?

Answer—The exact cause has never been discovered, or at least a satisfactory explanation has never been given. Air accumulates under the skin and at times will produce a "wind tumor" the size of a small walnut. The remedy is to prick the skin with a pin and allow the air to escape. If it again accumulates, cut out a small diamond-shaped piece of the skin with a pair of sharp scissors and anoint it with vaseline.

Question.—Kindly give me a recipe for a good tonic for fowls that hang around listlessly and do not lay. They do not seem to be particularly sick but more in need of a good tonic than anything else.

Answer—One ounce each of carbonate of iron, pulverized gentian root, black antimony, mandrake, ginger, flour of sulphur and powdered charcoal, four ounces of bicarbonate of soda. Mix thoroughly and place one teaspoonful in each quart of soft food. This is an excellent condition powder and superior to those advertised powder and superior to those advertised under various names.

Question—What is the best breeds for capons and what time of the year should they be hatched?

Answer—Any of the medium size or large breeds will make good capons. Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes are as good as any. The chicks should be hatched in March and April.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By FRANK HECK

THE author claims and proves that this book contains information upon a greater variety of subjects than any book on poultry ever written. It has also drawn out more unsolicited testimonials from authorities and experts.

Why worry and wonder and grope in the dark? Why learn by expensive experience and disappointment when everything is offered you at so small a price? The knowledge gained by years of experience is contained in this book. The methods and secrets of the foremost successful breeders and exhibitors in the show room are given in full.

NATIONAL BANTAM ASSN. YEAR BOOK.

The annual year book of the National Bantam Assn. is ready for delivery and copy may be obtained by sending 10 cents in stamps to Geo. L. Young, Secy., 349 Eleventh St., Brooklyn, N. Y. The book consists largely of show reports of last season in which the winnings of club members are given.

CHICAGO DATES FIXED.

The Great Mid-West Show will be held at Chicago, Dec. 14th to 19th, 1911. The management is making a strenuous effort to make this show the largest and best in American during the coming season. The judges are Tucker, Russell, Shellabarger, Falkner, McCord, Pickett, Kaye, Rikkoff, Van Winkle, Ellison and Cook. The premium list will be ready for mailing Nov. 1. Copies may be obtained by addressing Theo. Hewes, Secy., Indianapolis, Ind.

TENNESSEE STATE FAIR POULTRY SHOW.

The Sixth Annual Exhibition of the Tennessee State Fair Poultry Show will be held at Nashville, Tenn., September 18-23, 1911. The Tennessee State Fair Show is recognized by breeders and exhibitors over the entire country as one of the greatest and best state fair shows on the American continent, and as a market place for pure bred poultry it is doubtful if there is a show in the union that can equal it. The show will be held in a magnificent poultry building; the association owns its own wire front coops with sufficient accommodations for 6,000 birds. Every convenience for handling the birds will be provided. Mr. John A. Murkin has again been appointed director of the Tennessee State Fair Poultry Show, to whom all inquiries for information should be addressed.

STERLING, ILL.

The poultry breeders of Sterling and vicinity have organized the Sterling Poultry Association and incorporated under the laws of the state. W. K. Dunmore is president, A. B. Kreider superintendent, and A. T. Scoville secretary. They have set Dec. 18th to the 23d inclusive, for the date of their first show and have secured the services of Charles McClave as judge.

FORT WAYNE, IND.

The Ft. Wayne show will be held Jan. 17th to 22d, 1812, with Geo. H .Northrup as judge. J. C. Howerstein is secretary of the show.

MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE RHODE ISLAND RED CLUB OF AMERICA.

Pursuant to a call issued by President Sibley, a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Rhode Island Red Club of America was held at the Copley Square Hotel, Boston, Mass., May 3rd, 1911, at which meeting the newly elected officers assumed their duties, and matters of much importance and interest to the Club members were acted upon.

There were seven members of the Committee present, President Irving A. Sibley, Vice-President Geo. P. Coffin, Secretary-Treasurer W. F. Burleigh, E. L. Prickett, Lester Tompkins, C. M. Bryant, and Robert Seaman.

It was voted to offer $202 in Cash Specials, to be placed, $50 at the Chicago, Ill., Show, $50 at the Boston, Mass., Show, $50 at the Appalachian Exposition Poultry Show, Knoxville, Tenn., $26 at the Grand Central Palace Show and $26 at the Madison Square Garden Show, New York City.

It was also voted that the Club offer ten $50 Cups, exclusive of the State Cups, at the following shows: Boston, Mass., Chicago, Ill., Knoxvile, Tenn., Grand Central Palace, New York, and Madison Square Garden, New York City.

The matter of several members of the Club using in their advertising the term "Non-fading Reds" was very fully discussed, and the Secretary was instructed by unanimous vote of the Committee to notify all such advertisers, who are members of the Club, that the Committee considers such advertising as misleading, and a detriment to the Reds and is opposed to it, and unless such advertising be discontinued the said Committee at their next meeting will prefer charges of conduct unbecoming a member of the Club.

A full report of all the business transacted at the meeting may be obtained by writing to W. F. Burleigh, Secy., Larabee's Point, Vt.

NATIONAL S. C. BLACK ORPINGTON CLUB.

The secretary of the above have just received another hundred medals, gold plated, to be awarded at the various fairs and shows this summer and fall among the members of the club who win in competition with other members.

In order to stimulate the growth of the club to the thousand mark, it has beed decided to make a special membership offer. If you will send us $1 now, we will credit your membership dues paid in full to October 1, 1912. This entitles members to compete for all cups and medals, etc., at all shows this summer (state and other fairs) and all of next year up to October 1, 1912, all for one dollar. Specials have been offered this year by the Wm. Cook & Sons Co., Lime Rock Farm and the Cheviot Farms at every show in America. Each new member is permitted to indicate his choice of location for the national state club meet when he sends in his dues. Madison Square, Chicago and Cincinnati are in the lead at present for the national meet. Let every breeder of the blacks get into the boom and put the blacks to the front.

The Three Greatest Living Barred Rock Males

"Ringlet" Bargain Sale

MY SPECIAL SALE LIST FOR 1911 is now ready for mailing and I am glad to offer to the people all over the world the MOST STRIKING PRICE REDUCTIONS AND THE MOST EMPHATIC BARGAINS ever offered thus far in the history of Barred Plymouth Rocks.

Now is the time to call upon the almost unlimited resources of my "Ringlet" farm and secure New York winners and sons, brothers, sisters and daughters of New York winners, and birds of this richest New York prize winning blood at the marked down bargain prices.

This is America's foremost bargain sale and surpasses anything of the kind ever hitherto attempted in thoroughbred poultry.

In this list from cover to cover are listed the rarest bargains in single birds, pairs, trios and breeding pens and lots to meet the needs of all. no matter whether wanted for fine breeding or exhibition in the strongest competition in the world.

You will have the solid satisfaction of selecting from the largest and richest New York prize winning stock in America today—the selections are unbounded.

The Imperial "Ringlets" are the proud product of more than a quarter of a century of Barred Rock breeding--they have the most fashionable barring and even blue color of the present day, they sell when no others will by reason of their matchless quality.

At the last Madison Square Garden, New York Show, 1911, my "Ringlets" won the most wonderful record in the history of the New York Show, including 1st prize and Champion Cockerel, 1st Cock, 1st and 2nd Pens, all silver cups and cash specials--23 prizes on 25 entries.

IT WILL BE TO YOUR INTEREST TO HAVE THIS SPECIAL SALE LIST and take advantage of this opportunity to secure "Ringlets" at the CUT DOWN BARGAIN PRICES. IT IS SOUND BUSINESS JUDGMENT TO BUY WHAT YOU WANT WHEN OFFERED FOR DOLLARS LESS THAN IT IS WORTH--IT IS JUSTICE TO YOURSELF AND ECONOMY. Whatever may be your wants in Barred Plymouth Rocks you will find it in my SPECIAL SALE LIST AT BARGAIN FIGURES. The list will be mailed promptly upon request.
